ROOSEVELT

By CHARLES T. HOGE

We reared him to our highest place,
We trusted him for truth and zeal,
Then watched time's etchings on his face
Which courage could not quite conceal.
Some seared became with tasks undone,
He sought more years to see them through;
Some scoffed at what he had begun
That freedom's dreamings might come true.

Most loved, most hand, long he strove
Against harsh foes at home, abroad,
And fought the fight for truth and love,
Spurred by the urge of men and God.
Nigh on the marble wall engrave—
Not waiting for the war to cease—
"His genius and his life he gave
That humankind might dwell in peace."
ROOSEVELT

By CHARLES T. HOGE

We reared him to our highest place,
We trusted him for faith and steel;
Then watched time's etchings on his face
Which courage could not quite conceal.
Some mocked because with tasks undone,
He sought more years to see them through;
Some scoffed at what he had begun
That freedom's dreams might come true.

Yet loved, yet hated, long he strove
Against harsh foes at home, abroad;
And fought the fight for truth and love,
Spurred by the urge of man and God.
High on the marbled scroll engraved—
Not waiting for the war to cease—
"His genius and his life he gave
That humankind might dwell in peace."

Reprinted from the Oregon Journal
Greetings

Portland, Feb. 5th 47

Dear Mrs. Roosevelt,

I am glad you are in our city and hope you enjoy a pleasant time. I am reading under the conditions, a poem published in your Journal shortly after our beloved President's passing. I admired it, and thought you would like a copy to put with your other items. I was not able to get your address, so this is my first opportunity to reach you, and, I hope it reaches you.

I completely adored President Roosevelt and I think just as much of you. I hope you'll always be blessed with good health and able to carry on.

Sincerely yours,

(Mrs.) Joanie J. Board.
2010 P. Boardman.
Mrs. Roosevelt,
Apartment 15-A,
29 Washington Square, West,
New York City 11. 16th July 1947.

Dear Mrs. Roosevelt,

I should like to express my sincere appreciation of the fact that you have received the French Military Medal on behalf of the late President, who was so worthy.

On this occasion I want to repeat the great admiration which I had for President Roosevelt and for the splendid work that he did – not only for his own country but for the whole of humanity.

Believe me, dear Mrs. Roosevelt, your sincere fellow-believer and well-wisher

Carmen de Curtubay,
Marquise de Yurreta y Gamboa;
Hotel Metropole,
37 rue Francois ler.,
Paris.