you new horizons—heights of opportunity and

For children, such as you, devoted parents and teachers are doing everything to help you face your future—to face it with knowledge and confidence and smiling.

You, smiling! For today youth knows a lesson in dental health that many an adult has yet to learn.
Right in the classrooms of thousands of schools, boys and girls are being taught the importance of from, healthy gums to bright teeth and sparkling smiles.

These youngsters know that soft foods rob our gums of chewing and stimulation. They know why gums tend to become tender, sensitive, and often signal their distress with a ring of "pink"
on your teeth brush.

Never Ignore "Pink Tooth Brush"

If you see "pink" on your tooth brush—on your dentist; it may not mean anything serious—but get his advice. He may say that your gums have become tender because of today's soft foods. And in many instances, he may suggest "the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage."

For Ipana is designed not only to clean teeth but, with massage, to aid gums. Every time you brush your teeth massage a little extra Ipana onto your gums. Circulation quickens in the gums—helps them to healthier function. Try Ipana and massage—for fresher gums, brighter teeth, a lovelier smile!

Finish Fight by Fisher

IT'S a hard-hitting brute — this dual-purpose 5-inch gun. It's the kind of fighting tool needed to smaller enemy fire power, to give our men a life-saving advantage when the going gets tough.

We cannot take credit for all of it. This big 5-incher was designed by the U. S. Navy, and its production is a tribute to the cooperation of thousands of workers and several companies.

But as we see it come down the Fisher assembly lines, we get a thrill of pride out of the work we have done on it. It's proof that Fisher craftsmanship has once more been pointed right, has once more registered a hit in the production target.

Whether it's bombers, fighting planes, anti-aircraft guns, tanks, delicate flight instruments or other armament to be built — Fisher craftsmen are on the job till they get it ironed out. That goes for some very rugged problems just up to us the men who do the shooting. And in this fight to the finish, we intend to stay right in the middle of such things until the final bell rings.

Women!
Count these months in lives—not days

LIVES! Lives of American men ... lives of the men of your own family ... the boy engaged in that girl down the street, the freckle-faced kid who uses to deliver your groceries, the younger who scuffled while he worked in the corner druggist, the husband of your best and oldest friend ... every man is a uniform.

LIVES! That's the measure of time in days of war.
How many of them will it cost America to win the Victory? How many will be lost?

No one knows. But this is certain: the more women who join us already at work—take a war job, enlist in the armed services—the better chance these men will have to live.

For the truth is this: we cannot allow war production to lag without paying a fearful price in casualties. The serious shortage of manpower in war plants and necessary civilian work threatens the success of our military forces.

It grieves right down to that!
Count these months in lives—not days—and no decent American woman will evade her obligation.

HAVE YOU GOT IT?

Maybe you never realized it, but chances are you have Athlete's Foot. Surveys show over 70% of U.S. adults infected each year. Mild cases may be hard to notice. But they may cause a great deal of discomfort. If you have any of these symptoms, you need to see a doctor and get treatment. Your doctor can prescribe a treatment that will get rid of Athlete's Foot. Don't let it become a bigger problem than it has to be.

NEW 2-WAY REDUCTION

1. Use Quinsana on footprints. The same way you would use Quinsana on the skin of your hands. This helps prevent the spread of Athlete's Foot.

2. Glue Quinsana peels into shoe box—let the glue dry. This stops insect from spreading Athlete's Foot.

These chart Sun’s course.

Everyone knows how the long days of summer blend into the short days of winter, but few people have anything but a hazy idea of how the sun shifts its position in the sky to bring about this yearly cycle.

For over a year Ernest Van Leuven Sr., an engineer with photography for a hobby, has been tracing the seasonal movements of the sun with his camera. Always facing westward from spot outside his Santa Monica, Calif., home, he has succeeded in taking a series of time-exposures which chart two basic elements of solar change: the transition from long days to short and the shifting of the sun’s path as it makes its great annual sweep from south to north and back again across the sky.

Picture No. 1 shows the sun setting at approximately 5:00 p.m. Pacific Time on Dec. 21. This is the shortest day of the year in the Northern Hemisphere, known as the winter solstice. The sun is setting behind a water tower in the distance beyond Van Leuven’s home. At the moment the picture was taken the sun was at its southernmost extreme; from this time on it will set each night at points progressively northward from the water tower. As it moves north the days will become longer. In picture No. 2, taken on March 21, the normal equinox, the sun is setting at a point midway on its northern trip. It is now to the right of Point A and the days are already quite long, for the sun at 5:00 p.m. is still far above the horizon. Picture No. 3 was taken on June 21, the longest day in the Northern Hemisphere, known as the summer solstice. The sun has now reached its northermost limit and its rays beat down almost vertically upon southern California. There are now about 14 hours of daylight out of every 24. From the summer solstice it begins to move southward, passing the autumn equinox (picture No. 4) and setting ever lower each day until it again begins to approach the winter solstice (picture No. 5).

Equal and Sun’s Path Parallels Each Other.

On May 21 Sun is almost back to tower from which it started on Dec. 21. Days now have about nine hours of Sun.

You've wondered why so many people are going around with large, happy smiles and their hearts going bumpity-bump!

They're just seeing JANE! And as a Warner Bros. picture, she's even more heart-warming and more hilarious than the play that ran two solid years on Broadway!

JANE is the teenage daughter of an American family, who sets her father, her mother and the United States Army on their ears. (And as the picture closes, she's about to go to work on the Marines.)

When you've met her, you'll leave the theater with a great big smile on your lips—a smile that's going to come back every time you think of JANE, for a long, long time to come...

We've made a lot of pictures, here at Warner Bros., that reflect America's greatness. But JANE, as much as "Destination Tokyo" or "The Adventures of Mark Twain," is a round-the-corner romancer—romancer America... and another example of how to combine "good picture-making with good citizenship."

It has come as a surprise to many breakfast lovers that any cereal so incredibly good to eat as Peps is actually the equal of the whole, ripe grain in the primitive food elements that have been declared essential to human nutrition.

That's a good thing to know next time you stand before your grocer's cereal shelf—or next time the youngsters say: "Let's have Peps for breakfast."

As one of Europe's top photographers, he covered the rise of the Fascists, along with his eyes and lens came the speed of many among the little people of a continent. At length he himself left Europe to make a new home and new wider expressions in America.

WITH HER BABY IN HER ARMS AND HER YOUNG SON TAKING REFUGE, MAD. VAX BASS CROSSES CLAY TO HER NEW HOME AT FORT DEFIANCE.

Weatunctions ARRIVE FROM EUROPE

Once Mrs. Eva Bass (above) was a nightclub singer in Paris. Before the war she lived happily in Milan with her husband and small son. When war came she and her little boy were thrown into prison because they were Swiss born. Later they were sent to a concentration camp and then to "Newchwang" at Batavia. There she gave birth to her baby girl. When the Allies landed in Italy she set out on foot with her two children on a 48-kilometer trip through the fighting lines. She carried the baby in one arm, the boy in the other. Sometimes for days they had no food.

On Aug. 3 Mrs. Eva Bass and 898 other refugees from Europe, arrived in the U.S. A weary, shabby group of men, women, and children from 17 countries, they were chosen to come here from Allied relief camps in Italy because they were virtually destitute and had no means of support. To Americans they gave a firsthand look at the hardships personal tragedies brought on by five years of Europe's war. They will remain at Fort Defiance, Oviedo, S. T., for the duration of the war as wards of the U.S. under the supervision of the War Relocation Authority. Since they entered the U.S. outside the immigration quotas, they will have to leave when the war is over.
Refugees are registered and then assigned to new homes in Army barracks.

The Doerner family, mother, father and six children, were rescued in two concentration camps in France. In September 1940 they made their escape to Italy. Here a hungry daughter, not knowing quite how to eat gracefully, proudly shows her favorite dish.

THE EDUCATION OF SYDNEY HILLMAN
HE HAS LEARNED A LOT ABOUT PRESSURE POLITICS BUT NOT ENOUGH ABOUT AMERICA

The high drama at the Democratic convention in Chicago—Sidney Hillman's attempt to take over the party of Jefferson and Wilson—was preceded by a full-dress rehearsal in New York City. This was a strictly metropolitan affair. The middle-class artists and the small towns of America don't know much about it. But the ambitious Mr. Hillman seems to have a taste for destiny, if only the destiny of the Democratic Party, they ought to know the story of his political training—the story of New York's American Labor Party.

Like almost every other recent labor story of violent emotions, it goes back to John L. Lewis. In 1919, the fiery son of C. I. O., organized a New Deal auxiliary force and founded it Labor's Non-Partisan League. Its chairman was John L. Lewis; its treasurer was Sidney Hillman; and its New York affiliate was the American Labor Party.

This A. L. P. has been said, was from the beginning a minuscule on all three accounts; it wasn't American but strictly New Yorky, it wasn't Labor but just a political controllable to control those New York Democrats who might be repelled by the Tammany B.O. and so it wasn't a party at all.

And yet, at least during its first halcyon years, A. L. P. seemed to have a legitimate purpose, America's political scene was being frequented and ultimately enrichcd, by various attempts to launch a third party, A. L. P., even if it ended in New York, might have become an interesting experiment in making the independent vote count. And for a while, A. L. P. swung around 100,000 votes in New York State kept a franchise to decide on the merits of big parties, but eventually it became more than an interesting idea and eventually in 1933, Hillman heaved the margin that elected him district attorney.

Communists Split the A.L.P.

Enter the Communists. Earl Browder's poor showing in the 1938 election resulted in dropping the Communist Party from the New York ballot and it was looking bleak. A. L. P. got what it asked for and when it finally got its hands on the votes, it suddenly seemed to have a chance to become an important political force. A. L. P. had a chance to become a major political party.

But it was in this view that Sidney Hillman developed the strategy he later applied on a national level. To throw into a political debate (that, by American tradition, is joined by individuals who get up and want to be counted) the collective weight of legally unorganized sections. In his own words this is Mr. Hillman's idea of U.S. politics: "My proposal, in brief, is that all matters of party policy be to be democratically determined by the vote of the representatives of the corporatization trade unions, based upon their explicit party position in the party." Sydney Hillman had discovered something, but it wasn't America. In fact, he had discovered the common denominator of all totalitarian regimes - to crush the individual's free political decision by the momentum of anonymous mass organization.

The Left Wing ticket, led by Hillman and sponsored by Browder, washed in A.L.P. primaries. The Right Wing, led by Dubinsky, left New York's A. L. P. and recaptured it last May as the Liberal Party. Then Mr. Hillman acquired a useful political machine in the biggest state in the Union. He also gained an invaluable experience on how to take over someone else's party. The rehearsal was a success. He was all set for the big opening in Chicago.

A Foreign Phenomenon

What a few years ago might have looked like an outlawed brawl among New York's truly isolated radicals may well be the founding of a national force. At the end of the war this will be a new nation, supercharged with debts, emotions and a desire for change. And though nobody can foresee the shape of this movement, one thing is clear beyond doubt: this will be a nation jealously protecting its personality, opposed to anything foreign.

Now what makes Mr. Hillman's political ventures a foreign phenomenon is neither the birthplaces of many A. L. P. members nor his own. In fact, Eugene P. Connolly, a spokesman of Hillman's A. L. P., is an office of the Soviet of America. That is still a nation of immigrants—of immigrants who are overwhelmingly in voluntary agreement with the common purpose of America.

The utterly foreign phenomenon that is indicated by Mr. Hillman's rise to prominence is his intellectual backers' arrogant resentment against America's middle-class nature. Their is a quarrel for the foreign Balkanization of the U.S. A. L. P. is an extreme of national socialism. There are groups in the country today who are as willing to go to war as they are to vote, and these groups today are the groups that are ready to go to war in the name of America.

That Mr. Hillman's A. L. P. was disasterized with the two-party system and dreamed of reform does not make it foreign. Though the U.S. people have a sound prejudice in favor of the two-party system, they can often understand, and have often shared, a desire for reform and for stirring up water. But the mere idea of a third party on the left side in New York is foreign. In the eyes of New Yorkers, this is a small-town nation. And who ever tries to change this fundamental fact of America's life becomes enemies.

ARGENTINA SHOWS ARMY
THE PANOPLY OF FASCISM APPEARS IN SOUTH AMERICA
COMPLETE WITH PARADES, SYMBOLS, SLOGANS AND ARMS

Mountain troops are Peru's own specially. The display of these particular troops made the Chinese audience.

Tiger tanks are supposed to mount one 105mm. gun, four machine guns and to move at about 45 mph. on level ground. Though 40 tons, Argentina's tanks are so highly supported and groomed that they are entirely equal in appearance to American or British tanks.

Antiaircraft guns are loved by standard English aerialcraft. Trucks have been converted from the slopes of internal hills into small artillery. Peru has lately acquired a large number of these trucks and seems intent on offering her own army followers.

Over 4000 people of the Pan American army for the port of a week. Most of them, naturally, were made in Argentina.

Parachutists were seen in a circling mass, one man with a parachute, another with a parachute, another with a parachute. The Buenos Aires newspaper, the Sunday morning paper, has been put out of business.

On the far right are Peruvian airplanes noticed as they flew in formation. The American model is the one used by the Peruvian army.

THE BATTLE OF FRANCE

Vast Allied offensives roll through the low hills and plains of northern France on the way to Paris.

Through Abbeville, a setback designed to trap German tank forces still concentrated in Normandy; 4, northeast across the Loire through Orleans (not shown on diagram) in the direction of the great Brierean port of Barfins. In addition to the fast American drives heading out of the Boston position, the British were trying to break through in the north and east of Caen. The August 8th Cannaians forced their way northward en route to Falaise, but the density of German artillery defenses stopped them after a push of six miles. The Germans still hold on grimly to the remnants of their shattered line in Normandy. A few miles further north they made violent counterattacks in an attempt to push to the sea near Avranches. In this area the dwindling German armed strength was further reduced by the attacks of masses of E. S. and British tank-destroying planes.

The objectives of the Allied drives appear to be realized. They were the unification of all France and the destruction of the German Army in Western Europe. The push in the eastern Paris and Orleans sector is to be an attempt to split France in two. If successful, this would virtually remove German forces guarding the French-Mediterranean coast against a possible Allied landing. It would prevent some of the last supply routes to the Germans in Italy. The E. S. should to Argentan and a new push north by Cannaians from near Falaise threatened to close a gigantic trap in which over 100,000 Germans might be caught. If these objectives could be gained, the Germans might never have a chance to retreat to the Siegfried Line.
RUINS OF ST. LÔ

French may leave town as monument to the fighting which destroyed it.

Between 1100 and 1600 families, church was known for its Gothic double towers, of which only part of one now remains.

During June and July the Normandy town of St. Lô was approximately at the center of the war in France. As long as the Germans were there, its gray stone houses were continuously blasted by Allied shells and bombs. When the town fell to the Americans, the Germans retreated just behind the outskirts and added to the damage with an intensive mortar shelling. By the time the Germans were pushed back in the opening days of the great U.S. offensive, St. Lô had been thoroughly destroyed as any town in this war, including Beauvoir, Stalag and Carentan.

The destruction of St. Lô was so complete that it seemed doubtful whether it would be worth rebuilding. Said one Frenchman slyly: "The town has been killed and cannot be brought to life." It was possible that the ruins might be left untouched, as a monument to the fighting which marked Normandy. The French had done this once before at Dien Bien Phu, near Verdun.

FRENCH TRAITOR

Excitable Bretons beat a cringing collaborationist in Rennes street

U.S. troops have found that the people of Brittany are totally unlike the people of Normandy. When the Normans had been released from their captivites toward Allied troops, Bretons went into a frenzy of joy at the sight of them. In some towns, the women blocked military traffic to kiss the doughboys. Their treatment of collaborationists differed too. Normans had been rude and jaundiced toward traitors. Bretons hunted them down as soon as the G.I.'s had gone. In Bretons records beat and jeered collaborationists in the street, forced them to say "Vive la France, vivre Breizh, vivre Maurelan!" (LIFE Photographs Bob Landry, who made the picture above, reflected our own in Bretonia to a supernatural degree. The Bretons held horse collaborationists. Said Landry: "They pushed one of the terrified stewards against a fence, smashed another fellow's nose until blood covered his face and started in on the third."

Incidents in his home-week with the Japs. He was provisioned by a faithful native who brought him rice and other food once a week in a five-gallon gasoline can which had been sealed in ball. This helped keep him going until he escaped from Guam during the July 20 shelling by U.S. warships. He flashed a mirror to attract attention, then signaled a native ship with candle smoke (figs. He had been saving for just such a happy occasion. "I have information," Tweed whispered. The ship dispatched a small boat which picked him up in the surf.

When he emerged from the bush Tweed weighed about 150 pounds. He had weighed 270 when he went into hiding, although he was only 5 feet 7, inches tall. His blond hair was now slightly subdued, but not so much as the average man of 42 who had spent 10 years in the Navy could expect. The most impressive thing was his normal appearance. He was 21 years old as a man who had gone off on a weekend fishing trip. In fact he said he wanted to go hunting when he got home. His voice was low and he listened occasionally as he spoke but, as he pointed out, he wasn't used to talking much. By the time he reached Pearl Harbor he had no ambition but to return home to Admiral Nimitz for one speaking up: "I've talked more in the past three days than I have in the past 10 months put together."

One lone machine gun

Tweed was a radioman first class when the Japs invaded Guam after bombing it specially for two days. He was soon promoted to chief radioman by the admiral to whose carrier he was taken after being rescued. In October 1941 his wife and two young sons, one of whom he had been born that January on Guam, had been evacuated with other women and children. The Guam defense force consisted of about 30 military and 100 civilians. For anti-aircraft defense there was only one machine gun.

"The Japs landed some time after midnight of Dec. 10," Tweed said, "and I was awakened by machinegun fire. I got up out of my wriggled bed—my hose had been hit by a bomb the day before—and went down to Government House. They told me the garrison would

IT'S TRUE! NO OTHER LEADING DENTIFRICE CAN GIVE YOU THIS PROTECTION!

Look at the cavity at the tip of the arrow (above, right)—and the evidence printed alongside it! These dentists could actually tell whether a person was right or left-handed—just by these scored-in cavities! A right-handed brusher got deep cavities on teeth where he normally brushed hardest—teeth on the left side of his mouth. And vice-versa.

Your teeth haven't cavities, but they might have. How can you tell? Simple—look them over. The usual 99% of cavities occur on the biting edges of your teeth. Your modern liquid dentifrice—protects your teeth because it cleans without scouring abrasives—has abrasives of any kind.

The first year passes
Toward the end of 1941, the world was totally amazing. Sometimes he had to keep on the move, changing his hiding place two or three times a day. Once some Japs who were hunting other men that hid in the same place as he did, he was able to stay in his hiding place long enough to escape.

Every evening he'd have to change his hiding place to avoid capture. He was always on the move, never stopping for more than five days at a time. When he finally stopped, he was too exhausted to move again.

Even for him, the world physically and mentally was completely different from what he was used to. He had to learn to live without his usual meals and his favorite activities. He had to adjust to living in a new environment that was completely different from his own.

Last year, the Navy sailed in its first big bombing raid on Guam. It was a part of the preliminary to the Japanese invasion. They had been a long time coming, but they were at last, Toward said. He had never heard before of the battleships and submarines that were waiting for him in the Pacific Ocean.

Sioux City is a Seaport now!

No longer is Sioux City "remote" from the sea. Not any other city or section in America.

Louis's better, eggs, corn, fruit, must reach millions of one fighting men abroad—in ships. Its farm machinery and seeds must go to devastated countries—in ships. The situation it needs to produce still more food must be laid down on American dukas—by ships.

We've learned plenty of hard lessons from this war, and one is this: America cannot live "within itself". Our life lines extend around the world, and adequate shipping to maintain these life lines is the measure of our wartime strength and peace-time security.

We learned this lesson once before—World War I. Yet we let our Merchant Marine sink from a strong first to a poor fourth by the time the war started. The Axis knew this. They counted on it to keep us from bringing our vast productive power to bear until it was too late.

But in 1936, men with foresight drafted the Merchant Marine Act. It started a building program which kept us from being caught flat-footed when the Axis struck.

From this start, America in 1943 produced more than nineteen million tons of merchant shipping. An almost equal total was scheduled to slide down the ways in 1944.

Today, as the greatest maritime power in the world, we are gathering the strength for final victory. Let us never again lose that strength. Let us never again forget that a powerful Merchant Marine is our greatest strength in time of war—our surest safeguard of a lasting peace.

Westinghouse is proud to be a partner in building America's new Merchant Marine. Westinghouse machine-driven power the new Victory ships. You'll find Westinghouse steam and electrical equipment on every type of ship on duty.

Yes, in building supplies to the Marine industry, we are directly interested in its future. Yet beyond this, we consider it the responsibility of every manufacturer, of every citizen, to see that American ships keep the front, swiftest and most efficient Merchant Marine in the world.

 Acting with the War Department, Westinghouse is planning to use the ship's steam and electrical systems to show the War Department how to design and construct ships. This is the first step in putting into effect the plans of the War Department on the design of ships.

Keep our Merchant Marine to help keep peace.

..on half measure reason, while making them work for virtually nothing. But in June they began killing Chamorros who dared even look up into the sky at the approach of American planes. Subsequently it has been reported by correspondent Robert Martin that Guam's well-educated natives were generally agitated that at least nine men and one woman, a Rosaline Domingo, were executed for helping the Americans who hid in the hills or for possessing firearms. With a gesture of moving their hands across their breasts the natives said, "We had to like them and obey them or they cut our necks off."

Down from the hills

Each week the Japs conducted propaganda lectures and every few weeks they held citizenship parades. One minister substituted a tropical lecture for his usual sermon and invariably ended up with an account of battles in which "our loss was one ship." Despite these efforts to gain converts, the Japanese found that the natives fled to the hills to await liberation as soon as they were sure that the Americans were coming back. Haggard, half-starved but happy, they rushed down to the beachhead to welcome the first marines.

Chief Tewd's greatest concern, he confided on the plane, was his pretty brunette wife and children. "Suppose my wife's name isn't Mrs. Tewd any longer?" he asked nervously. "I really couldn't blame her if she remarried." The thought disheartened him until he reached his home in Santa Fe, Calo, where his mother-in-law at last did recognize him when he appeared at the door, immaculate in a new uniform. When recognition finally dawned there was a joyful reunion and a home-cooked meal of green beans, pork and potatoes, but it was not until the next day that Tewd got to San Diego where his wife has been working. He was amazed at the growth of his children and almost equally amazed at the new war plants which had sprung up around the city while he was hiding out in Guam.

Sharing his concerns were most remaining Americans. Tewd drank glass after glass of milk. After two weeks with his wife and sons, he visited his mother near Portland, Ore. and some of the old hassles he once resented as a boy with a slingshot. Having completed a 30-day leave he is back on the active list. Although men missing for a year are usually given up as dead, Tewd's name was carried over from year to year on the job list again. He has learned that he passed the examination for chief radioman which he took in November 1943. He has been wondering about that examination for a long time.
On the night of Dec. 12-13, 1941 a fleet of landing craft carrying a small force of U.S. troops crept stealthily across the Coral Sea from New Guinea. The task was to wrench a beachhead from the enemy on the southern tip of Allied New Britain. Ahead one of the ships was LIFE artist David Fredenthal, who was then attached to General MacArthur's command.

Before dawn the task force reached the New Britain coast and split into several units for the operation. The main force was to make the landings at Awaro. But first another force of 120 men was to land at a more northerly beach, then attack the enemy's rear. Fredenthal's sketches, reproduced in black and white on these pages, show what happened to this second party. Of the 120 commandeered men who scrambled over the side of a destroyer and piled into rubber boats, many were Texans, including the leader, Captain Ed Wright. In the boat behind him was the artist's friend, A. P. Correspondent Bob Edsall. A bright moon illuminated the boats against the lumpy black sea. Twenty-six minutes after they had left the destroyer's side they passed over the reefs and were within 30 yards of the silent, wooded Japanese beach. Suddenly all 16 boats were trapped in a devastating crossfire of enemy fire. For 30 minutes 80 machine guns whipped the rubber boats, killing and wounded the men. Then an American destroyer pulled in close and, over the hollers of the wounded and drowning men, lobbed shells into the Jap gun positions, silencing them. Later, a submarine picked up survivors. Eleven of the 16 boats had been torn to shreds, about half of the 120 men killed.

Despite this initial disaster the main force carried out its plan, landing at Awaro. Though opposed from the shore, it was successfully eluded by Jap planes. In the color paintings which begin on page 6, David Fredenthal shows the exploits of this main assault force from the time it started out from New Guinea until it stormed its way into the wild, hot jungle coast of New Britain.
Officers wait to embark on a rain-soaked South Pacific jetty. They command a party of troops who will attack the main body. It has been pouring steadily for three days. The officers went under their ponchos and ineptly dodge their blue bermuda bags.

Advance party goes ashore. Some are already basking across rough water in LCT's toward enemy positions and are ready to land having the shorelines. Apathetic and gun-hand some, their bellies dealt with green paint, wait on destroyer deck to step into their LCT.

After three hours after Japanese guns were silenced, the survivors are bunched up on deck by rows. Men cling to rubber boats huddled with wounded.

The wounded are piled in first-moored boats that went off about half Navy shelling knocked out Japanese guns. Men at right is trying to save ponchos and mattresses from the boat which is listing.

The survivors on rubberboat deck are given hot coffee, cigarettes, and clothing. To make better camouflaged turn off their clothes. The doctor goes emergency treatment to the wounded on the deck.
Into the jungle of Buna charge men of the seventh wave who have just landed from the beach. They move cautiously and stealthily forward across the narrow beach, seeking the tangled foliage for cover and to keep their heads hidden behind coconut frond barriers.

Dazed by poison gas, men crouch behind shattered palm trunks and try to read the whole scene under steel helmets. The enemy Japanese planes split white smoke at the一间, and there are empty statistics on the back of the planes in a red flash. German machine guns.
Sure, we can predict "the fleeting moment of perfect flavor" in picking and packing our Niblets Brand whole kernel corn. But it's really not done by seismographs and crystal balls. It is scientifically predicted by a "diary" of daily heat and moisture, starting from the time the special seed (D-156) goes into the earth.

This "diary" even goes to an hourly basis when the perfect picking time gets close. Then our laboratory goes to work. Our scientists tell us from the milk of the corn kernel exactly when it's "on your mark—get set—pick."

Vacuum cans seal in the flavor and tenderness which nature and science have preserved for your table.

Yes—you're job is waiting for you, Soldier!

Here are Socony-Vacuum's answers to your questions:

From many sources comes word that the things America's fighting men worry about most in their spare moments are the years lost from their jobs during one of the most productive periods of their lives... their place in the world after the fighting is over.

That is the reason for this statement of policy from the Socony-Vacuum Oil Company: Socony-Vacuum's 6,000 regular employees now in military service have nothing to worry about as far as their post-war jobs are concerned.

We Want You Back! Before the war, we considered the group of Socony-Vacuum employees now in the Armed Forces as an important part of our strong future manpower. We still do. It won't be a question of "making a place" for you. Socony-Vacuum will welcome you!

There Will Be Jobs! Socony-Vacuum is not waiting until the end of the war to make provisions for rehiring returning servicemen. All Socony-Vacuum divisions are now planning complete post-war organizations... based on conservative estimates of post-war volume. These surveys indicate that there will be many more openings than the number of employees now on "leave of absence" with the armed forces.

You Haven't Stood Still just because you've been away from your job at Socony-Vacuum! Many of you have acquired new skills. Many more have gained maturity and ability to handle men from your training, your travels, your experiences in the Armed Forces. All of this will be taken into consideration in assigning you to a job.

Opportunity Will Be Great! We believe that the petroleum industry—and Socony-Vacuum in particular—will offer a splendid future to returning servicemen. There will be great opportunities for capable men with Socony-Vacuum—and with the thousands of independent dealers who market Socony-Vacuum products. We want our part of the "pick of the nation's manpower" to return to us. We are sure they do, too!

Makers of Mobilgas, Mobiloil and more than 200 other petroleum products for peace and war!

GOOFY COMES HOME

Veteran of U.S. Army comes back to his family, friends and doghouse Honorable discharge is Goofy's reward for his 17 months' service. He returned as meat-eating umpire.

A tremendous pug dog named Goofy galloped into the house of the Army toughs in Melrose Park. To the strains of the latest swing music, his doghouse, muffled with fur, was replaced by a familiar radio. Goofy wriggled in, and the doghouse was removed. When Goofy was successfully discharged, his owner was overjoyed. His pet was safely shipped home. For 14 days the Army treated him, stretched his stomach, and made roaring noises to help him over the difficult period of rehabilitation for civilian life.

War years have been too much for some K-9 veterans. One of them, who was so tough that he turned off his master, was so far from Goofy that he was happy to be home. He is more than willing to work in the Army, has shown no desire to get back in the fight. Army Me has been good training for Goofy, with one small exception. Evidently he will have to be housebroken all over again.

Eyes that plead for help!

They are warning you, Mother. Those dimmed eyes are trying to explain that something is wrong.

Then they ask, perhaps. Or that the words in the spelling book look blurry and smeary. That they won't "stand still".

And the writing and numbers on the blackboard look so far away... the pictures so distorted. . . inaudible... hard to see.

On your guard, Mother. Don't take those precious young eyes for granted. Make sure about them. Free your struggling child from the hopelessness, helplessness, fear that schoolwork brings.

Remember that a child's education depends largely on what he sees. 85% of knowledge must come through those marvelous gateways to the brain that provide the miracle of vision.

Understood, too, that vision is a tooled function. It can be developed. A child has to dare to see or just as she has to learn to walk, run and swim. Perfecting a fine seeing pattern isn't always easy—especially when eyes are defective.

And 28% of all eyes of school age are at fault. These faults are of many kinds. They produce all sorts of wobbling blocks to clear, sharp, strain-free vision. Objects are made to appear double. Or blurred. Or dimmed. Or not at all.

...Obvious results are eye strain, nervousness, headaches and other ills.

Learning becomes a torment. Failure results. Naturally. A child is unfairly blamed... awkward. Behavior, personality, progress—all are bound to be altered—adversely.

So, you see, Mother, why eyes should be looked after early—and often—just as are teeth, heart, lungs. By a competent, professional man of course. The scientific services of the Ophthalmologist and Optometrist, and the technical skills of the Ophthalmic Dispensers (Opticians) can do wonders in freeing eager young minds from the shackles of poor vision and eye-strain.

Be wise, Mother, look after those precious young eyes. Keep them forever young!

TRUMAN OF MISSOURI

A VICE-PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE COMES HOME TO HIS RELATIVES AND FRIENDS IN INDEPENDENCE

As I told him, Harry Truman's mother asked back in 1928 when he was elected to the Senate. "No, I know that boy would amount to something from the time he was 9 years old. He would climb the straightest run of corn in the county. He could pick the best froghopper on the field of study."

Last week Harry Truman's mother (now 77) and all of the good citizens of Independence, Mo., were again busy congratulating the Senator. For months Harry Truman, the farmer, soldier, newspaper publisher, and small-town politician, had been nominated by the Democratic convention for the vice presidency. Truman then became the first Missouri to attain a place on a major party's Presidential ticket since Governor B. Gats Brown ran with Horace Greeley in 1872.

As soon as the Chicago convention was over, Truman hurried his wife and daughter into his last 1941 Chrysler coupe, drove them home to Independence. To his neighbors he said: "I'm just a farmer boy from Jackson County. There isn't going to be any spoiled when I get to Washington."
GOOD LUCK HAS COME THREE TIMES TO HELP HIS CAREER

Truman is a political accident. He is a country politician, intelligent and hard-working, nothing he's been to date. Until 1947 his luck was all bad. Behind him was an inauspicious career in World War I and debt left over from unsuccessful ventures into the haberdashery business. In 1902, however, Bess Truman won a seat in Congress from a new district created in the 2nd District of the state of Kansas. In 1906, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 1908, she ran for and won another term and in 1910, she ran for and won a third term.

In 1916, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 1920, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 1922, she ran for and won another term.

In 1946, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 1948, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 1950, she ran for and won another term.

In 1952, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 1954, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 1956, she ran for and won another term.

In 1958, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 1960, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 1962, she ran for and won another term.

In 1964, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 1966, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 1968, she ran for and won another term.

In 1970, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 1972, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 1974, she ran for and won another term.

In 1976, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 1978, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 1980, she ran for and won another term.

In 1982, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 1984, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 1986, she ran for and won another term.

In 1988, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 1990, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 1992, she ran for and won another term.

In 1994, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 1996, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 1998, she ran for and won another term.

In 2000, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 2002, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 2004, she ran for and won another term.

In 2006, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 2008, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 2010, she ran for and won another term.

In 2012, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 2014, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 2016, she ran for and won another term.

In 2018, Bess Truman won a seat in the House of Representatives from Kansas. In 2020, she ran for and won the post of U.S. Senator for Kansas with a margin of 2,000 votes. In 2022, she ran for and won another term.
Truman waves a greeting during a dinner given by Silliman of Kansas City, Mead Johnson and others. With him he met in the Empire Hotel, New York, Moses Agnew and the Missouri primary, neglected it. To his office, dealing with portraits of George Washington, Andrew Jackson and Franklin Roosevelt, came well-wishers, job-seekers, partisans, old friends. Because he considers it too much of an expense to have a telephone in his office, he has to go next door to the office of Judge Cakie Collyer whenever anybody calls him by phone.

BALL BEARINGS

MOVING PARTS OF A GREAT WAR MACHINE ROLL ON THESE LITTLE BALLS OF PRECISION-GROUND STEEL

Almost every piece of war equipment including guns, bombsights, tanks, fighters and airplanes uses ball bearings to reduce the friction and control the accuracy of its moving parts. In a heavy bomber alone there are some 2,000 steel balls of various sizes. Wherever a shaft turns it depends on the few rolling, rolling motion of a ball bearing, whether it is on a milling machine whose main bearing over steel balls almost four feet across or on a fuel gauge which encircles balls 1.000 of an inch in diameter. Ball bearings are such a vital part of any war machine that the Allied forces have made the German bearing industry one of their top priority targets.

A ball bearing consists of four parts: (a) Steel rings. Two carefully machined steel rings have precision ground surfaces which act as runners for the balls. A separator or cage surrounds each ball as a metal guide to prevent the balls from hanging into one another or bouncing up as they ride on the runners of the assembled bearing. When a bearing is placed on a shaft the revolving results is supported by a circle of spinning balls which translates sliding friction into rolling movement. To obtain proper balance and tolerances which are sometimes set within 1/100,000 of an inch, bearing parts are ground, machined and polished with exacting care.

Bust, dust and lint are the enemies of a ball-bearing factory. The moisture from a single droplet may produce enough rust to ruin a finely ground ball. A few specks of dust or a bit of lint may clog the rings of a bearing. To guard against these perils the tiny bearings are inspected and assembled in special dust-free rooms by workers dressed in lint-free clothes and gloves. The pictures on the next page show some of the precautions taken at New Departure, largest U.S. bearing manufacturer.

Grinding machine equipped with five abrasive paper rolls to shape balls smoothly. Finish so as to run at high speed.

Grinded balls receive a long bit for hardening. At other ends of the fornted balls are quenched to a large of heat.

Through several steps, balls will finally be assembled and sealed with a protective cover to prevent rust.
JOHN FOSTER DULLES
A WILSONIAN AT VERSAILLES, THIS FAMOUS LAWYER MAY BE DEWEY'S SECRETARY OF STATE

by JOHN CHAMBERLAIN

John Foster Dulles, the international lawyer who is Tom Dewey's counselor in foreign affairs and a likely candidate for Republican Secretary of State, is not what you might have thought him for at first glance. To look at him, you might think he had just finished contact with a green pigeon, and in the latter part of his briefs would make him seem a part of the Wall Street firm of Sullivan & Cromwell. You would only begin to guess that he can distill the poetry of action as well as a dog team out of such materials as redacting the corporate structure of the International Nickel Company. Moreover, when you get him talking about his life he begins to sound as if he were a man of adventure, one of those men who have lived in a preacher's house, memorized the Bible and read Faulkner. Progress on Sunday as a virtual comic relief from three compulsory services of his father's church, and he is probably the only living human being who ever took a trained mare who was not his bride along with him to his honeymoon.

Such stories are no more an index to Dulles' character than the lady are described by the librarian is an index to pitcher 'Big' Sewell's earnings average. For Dulles delights in being a man about his past as much as he delights in seeing his friends. Behind his polished exterior, he has lived one of the most adventurous, romantic and satisfying lives to be had by any American of his generation. Like Lawrence of Arabia, who refused even in order to keep his palace keys for the astounding pleasures of clear water, Dulles deplores much of the more obvious traps of adventure in order to get at its true essence. Yet, unlike Lawrence, he is prone to get his adventure on a list of necessities. Dulles is not a man who makes a living by his adventurousness. And so Dulles is the sort of man who makes it a matter of policy to have as little as possible of his life as a pension.

In this connection, Dulles' life has been a study in how to live with a minimum of expense. He was born in 1893, the son of a merchant, in a small town near New York City. He was educated at Princeton and Oxford, where he received a degree in arts. He then returned to the United States and entered the practice of law. He has been a partner in several law firms, and has been a member of the New York Bar Association. He has also been a member of various other organizations, including the American Bar Association and the American Law Institute.

Dulles' life has been marked by a series of experiences and achievements, both in his personal and professional life. He has been a member of various organizations and has held several positions in various capacities. He has been a member of the New York Bar Association and has been a member of various other organizations, including the American Bar Association and the American Law Institute.

In addition to his legal career, Dulles has been a member of various organizations and has held several positions in various capacities. As so soon as he was back on U.S. soil she tried to get into an officer's reserve carry, but the condition of his eye shot him into a 10-year military intelligence. As a liaison officer between the various services, he worked closely with the State Department and the General Staff. But following his own desire for a more secure position, he was then a daring force in economic warfare without telling the State Department about it, and later he learned about the Department's plans. As Dulles says, "Uncle Robert was mad," but he knew the State Department wasn't any more yet. The second part of the story is: "in 1942, it was a generation later."

When the war of 1918-19 was over, he looked at it through the windows of the Economic Warfare Department. He became important to the War Trade Board. As the man in possession of this information, John Foster Dulles was accordingly named to Paris by Vannevar Bush, who was chairman of both the War Trade Board and the Democratic National Committee. The new position gave him an opportunity to learn from the world's leading experts in economic warfare and political figures.

On the question of international economy, the War Trade Board might be important to the Peace Conference. As the man in possession of this information, John Foster Dulles was accordingly named to the State Department in 1942, and a special post was created for him. mental financing by Germany, Norway, Poland, Denmark, France, Argentina, Uruguay, Chile and Colombia. In 1957, for example, Dullas was granted a business in the financing of the finances of a job that included creating a new currency.

With the collapse of the world market in the '50s, Dullas and Co worked to quiet international intrigue. Thus, they are coming to go on. As attorney for the American dealers in Krupp & Toll, Dullas has bet on the dollar for his claim— quite a claim of the 80 on the dollar for which the bonds were selling.

Surprisingly, the highest bidder on Dullas' case in the Dullas is fighting for the Belgian government's 81, which is among the Bottom of France for permitting 81,000,000 Belgian gold, which had replaced in its vaults for underwriting. Whether Dullas recovers that gold or not, Dullas will get his fees for the Belgians have some other deposits in London. But Dullas has made progress on the case; he has already succeeded in tapping $30,000,000 of French gold in this country. He gets a personal kick out of this, for the U.S. attorney for the Bank of France in Paris, Couellier, referred to him back in 1931 because he had gone to Harvard or Columbia.

Dullas gets a lot of satisfaction out of his relationships with his clients. But in 1957, when the world was rapidly working up toward the Munich crisis, several things happened to him to jolt him out of his routine. On his own personal road to Damascus, Dullas explored not only one but three distinct conversions. One was his sudden perception, at the age of 49, that the idea of his mission was no more important than the worldly wisdom of his grandfather. The second was his personal discovery that he no longer afraid of being a young man. And the third came as a result of his first meeting with a young man named Tom Dewey.

Needed: a new spiritual purpose

Even today Dullas is not a conventional religious man: "Christianity has its days," he said last summer. He ever prays, though, for his family, and he has a daily devotion to his face being scrubbed and then soaped. Fresh, clean smell.

the future of Sullivan & Cromwell depends on it no less than the future of global prosperity. But he does not see the sense of forcing expert at an uncomparably lower, stability is made is more important him than a precarious volume. A Dulles enemy might read into to him than a precautionary volume. Dullis was a fashion for a name that included the German capitalist system. But Dulles is certainly no Boer Pessone Republican when it comes to tariffs.

Up to 1987 Dulles still thought of himself as spending his working hours in the presence of his elders. Accordingly he still cultivated a restrained and deferential manner. But as he reached his late 80s he suddenly discovered that many of his contacts were with not younger than himself, men who looked up to him. Among those men were Tom Dewey, whom he met at one of those causal lawyer lineups by which the junior partners in big law firms keep track of rising talent. Although Dulles deleted to Dewey in his judgement on domestic things he could be proud of his potential when the younger man began pumping him about foreign affairs. The relationship made Dulles eager for Dewey's political advancement, for behind the figure of the opinion-seeking lawyer there is a creature in Dulles. He would like to play a direct role in shaping the future of the U.S. in the world and he makes no bones about it.

For the past five years Dulles has been preparing to have an impact on the peace through his work with the Federal Council of Churches. Inasmuch as Christians have a long list of values in a lot of countries it is clear that his labors in pushing the churchmen to formulate their message in terms of "six pillars of peace" will have an impact on the world's future regardless of his own political chances.

During the long years of his private practice, with its focused opportunities for creative manipulation, the artist in Dulles has had to be concerned with vocational satisfaction. His approach to his various summer homes is significant. At his place in Cold Spring Harbor he dabbles about with a pruning knife, working to keep his apple trees clear of worms and grubs. As he sits at dead bark he says, "You have got to work at it and expose it to the air. The pests of darkness are very evil." Dulles sometimes works in the vegetable garden at Cold Spring Harbor and repeats the fact that big apartment homes have cut off the sunlight from his garden in back of his white limestone Manhattan home at 73 East 72nd St.

The creative urge really came out at the picturesque log cabin that Dulles owns on Deer Island, where Lake Ontario merges into the St. Lawrence. There he builds fireplaces, picking out his own mantels. Every April he goes to Deer Island to watch the northward flight of birds. He does his own cooking, and later, in the summer when there isn't so much to do on show he takes to his yawl, which he and his sons twice sailed by way of the St. Lawrence, Canadian and New England coastal waters all the way to Long Island.

Although Dulles was a delegate to the Republican convention, he refused to sit on the platform committee. He didn't want to be implicated in the making of any foreign-policy plans laid down after the nomination of a Presidential candidate, for he felt almost certain that Dewey, if nominated, would have to speak out on his own. As one of the inner circle of Dewey advisers, Dulles is extremely busy these days hatching up ideas on foreign policy for Dewey to pocket. He will gladly forego minor criticism at Deer Island to imbibe the same for larger creative activities in connection with the campaign. And if a Republican victory should call him to Washington he would be glad to transfer his creative efforts to the office once occupied by his grandfather, who was Secretary of State in the days when Republicans weren't afraid of having a foreign policy.

They boarded a Swedish ship in a Portuguese port after being released from German internment camps. And every one brought a long post-war appetite for ice cream.

"We must have eaten at least a quarter of a ton of it the first day out," one of the Grischekow passengers reported.

That very human, very American incident has been multiplied many times during this global war — in every sector where Uncle Sam's sons and daughters are serving. Ice cream means birthday parties and strawberry sundaes and the corner drug store. Ice cream brings a brief taste of home to a browned soldier or a tired nurse.

But ice cream is much more than a pleasant memory or a delicious dessert. Like milk and cream, ice cream is a valuable food, rich in vitamins and calcium.

That's why ice cream appears on Army and Navy menus as regularly as possible — and civilians cannot always get all they want. But if you're content with your fair share, and take part of your order in real fruit sherbets or fruits, you can continue to enjoy ice cream.

For our part, we'll make as much ice cream as we can — and keep it pure and good — and continue the research that has developed so many nutritious products from milk — nature's most nearly perfect food.
Life Calls on a Little French Girl

Mlle. Paule Marie Truffert returns to her Cherbourg home and becomes a favorite of American soldiers Paule Marie Truffert of Normandy is 11 and redheaded, she has a broad and friendly smile and a Stevenson accent. She speaks pretty good English. These attributes have endeared her to the Allies since the Allies freed Cherbourg. Paule is particularly fond of colored Yankees. Indeed, all officers are "wells," "bells." They are delighted at her bright "Good morning!" and "What d'ya say, Ball?" Whiskers she speaks with a pock-faced "Ah, sure, ma'am." Paule is wholly unoccupied with her new friends; however. She is a serious and intense patriot, a young Frenchwoman with a full sense of responsibility. The Truffert family has lived in Cherbourg for a hundred years, is Normandy much longer. Her father served the local garrett which was taken up by the Germans. In May 1940 the Germans ordered Paule and her brother to evacuate to their grandparents' home in Falaise, leaving M. and Mme. Truffert with a bundle of German officers. Paule needed back on holidays to see her parents. A week after the Allies took Cherbourg she hitchhiked home to be with American soldiers. She plans to start a seven-year medical course at the faculty in Paris this fall. She can be a doctor in France West Africa. These pictures by LIFE photographer David Scherman portray Paule as perhaps most endearing personality that has just emerged from among the thousands of liberated French.

Whose Right?

There are three different kinds of locomotives—steam, Diesel and electric.

You don’t have to be a railroad man to guess what they’re arguing about.

It’s all in use, however. For deep-down issues, each of these men—and every man who really knows railroading—realizes that to one type of locomotive is better than the other two except under certain conditions and for certain specific duties.

That’s why American Locomotive builds all three. We’ve been in the business too long to champion one type of locomotive.

We know from a hundred years of experience that only a careful study of a railroad’s requirements can determine which type of power should be used.

Today, a large percentage of America’s railroad streamliners are powered by American Locomotive engines—some steam, some Diesel, some electric. Each is unsurpassed at its particular job because each was built for that particular job.

G. I. Miracle...

The first time it happened, they knew that they'd seen a miracle.
But when it happened again and again, they began to call it (a little humorously, perhaps, but with great pride) the "G. I. miracle."

And it happened again the other night: Long overdue, a bowler for a moment given up by the men who wait and watch, her general crew — she came in...More than 25 men of Belling Flying Fortresses that had rendezvoused with a half-mile of two of her engines from out of action and the remaining two damaged by enemy fire.

To the men and women who build Wright Cyclone engines, stories such as this have deep personal meanings. For theirs is the pride of building the power for the magnificent planes — power to living men back, and to hasten the end of the bitterest war of all time.

And here is the power, too, to maintain peace, insure our national security, and provide jobs in a new era of trade and transportation after the war is won.

For the rise of American airpower offers one most viable legacy of this war — 1,000,000 workers and men of the air, 110,000 miles of new American bases throughout the world, nearly 400,000 planes since Pearl Harbor; and more compared to total pre-war jet fleet of less than 400 planes.

But many problems must be faced immediately, if we are to meet the needs of these sons: Problems of finance, the distribution of surplus aircraft, our national security and international agreements, and the economics for the overworked airmen and modernization of

You can help solve these problems: The responsibility of looming size is — and of building sound governmental planning now — men with every man and woman in the United States.
