CITY PAYS HONOR TO FIGHTING MEN

CERTIFICATES PRESENTED TO THOSE WHO DID THEIR BIT.

TRIBUTE ALSO TO NURSES

First Official Welcome to Returned Soldiers, Sailors, Marines and War Workers Given by Great Throng of Citizens, Officials and Corporations at Armory—Mayor Distributes Awards—Addresses by Franklin D. Roosevelt, General Carter and Others.

Baltimore threw wide its portals last night for its first official welcome to the soldiers, sailors, marines and war workers, upward of 2,000 in all, who have thus far returned to the city from overseas during the last few months. The welcome was participated in by at least 10,000 Baltimoreans, who poured into the Fifth Regiment Armory seeking to leave nothing undone toward making the men feel the force of the welcome and the gratitude to which they were justly entitled.

Despite the vast proportions of the big armory it was almost inadequate for the throng. The participants found means of giving audible expression to their feelings during the community singing. The crowd of loyal men and women made the walls of the armory echo. The singing was led by the Naval Academy Band, of Annapolis. The musical program opened with a concert in which every man, woman and child in the armory heartily joined. Following the concert a choir of over 3,000 trained voices from the various department stores, under the direction of Dr. Charles G. Woolsey, of the War Camp Community Service, took up the musical trend and for the next hour sang and warbled notes of cheer and gladness in the ears of the men in whose honor the celebration was staged.

NO DISCRIMINATION.

John F. Ireton was chairman of the armory committee, and Miss Clara E. Shafer was the pianist.

It was announced that in the selection of names for the presentation of the certificates no discrimination was made, they were taken from the general list with the idea in view that all service ranks the same, and among those who received certificates last night were: Ensigns and seamen of the navy; captains and privates of the army and from the rank and file of the nurses. On the occasion of the next formal welcome another batch of names will be taken just as these were. Several of the men whose names were called last night failed to appear, and for the benefit of these men Mayor Preston said they would be available upon application at the City Hall at any time. Several troops of Boy Scouts rendered part in the readjustment of conditions and in their willingness to find immediate employment.

Secretary Roosevelt, representing the Navy, received an ovation when he arose. He at once launched into a generous strain of pride and appreciation for the bravery of the Maryland boys. He said they were worthy of all the praise and honor that could be bestowed upon them by the city, the state and by the Nation. Continuing, he said:

"It is very fitting that the City of Baltimore is, thus honoring its citizens who have borne their share in the world conflict. In these days of demobilization and of the resumption of peaceful pursuits it is well to look back in order that we may more sanely look forward to the future. The men of our armed forces who had the good fortune of getting into the actual conflict across the seas know better than any others the story of the great struggle, which plunged the world into a maelstrom nearly five years ago. They know even better than we the narrow thread upon which the fate of our civilization hung during more than three of those years. They know the history of our coming, the tremendous final onrush of the enemy one short year ago, and then the turning of the tide and the swift rush of the associated armies to the final victory.

"The war has given us unity, for we have but to see how boys from every state in the Union fought side by side in the same division or served on the same ship. The war has taught us discipline, and we can look on those men and the spirit they bring back with them to know that anarchy and lawlessness and the doctrines of destruction will have but short shrift in any American community.

"The Army and Navy of the United States was made up of young men, men who will in large part control the destinies and the thought and the action of our country for a generation to come. Their task is not yet done; their responsibility is a heavy one. We need not fear, I am sure, but that they will measure up to the work; that they will give us an assurance that the nation will continue safe as the guiding star of unselfishness and high ideals to all the world."

NAVY.

CERTIFICATES PRESENTED.

The most interesting feature of the evening's celebration was the presentation by Mayor Preston of certificates of honor to something over 100 soldiers, sailors, marines and nurses. These were presented in the name of Baltimore to the men and nurses who have thus far been released from the services. The opening invocation was delivered by Lieut. Reuben W. Shrum, of the United States Navy, after which followed an address by Hon. Edwin Warfield, chairman of the meeting, and speeches by Major General Jesse McI. Carter, representing Secretary of War Baker, and by Franklin D. Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy, and Mayor Preston. The benediction was pronounced by Chaplain John C. Moore, 313th Infantry, United States Army.

In presenting Mayor Preston, former Governor Warfield took occasion to speak of him as the Mayor of Greater Baltimore, and the Mayor who had put Baltimore on the map and who was always on the job.

Mayor Preston, in presenting the names of those who were to receive certificates of honor, called attention to the deep sense of gratitude the city feels toward these men for the vallant service they have performed, and bade them accept the tributes as carrying with them the fullest measure of pride and appreciation of their work and bravery in defending our country from the common enemy. The Mayor said in part:

"On the part of the citizens of Baltimore and the municipal authorities of Baltimore, I have the honor to present to you this diploma of appreciation.

CITY IS GRATEFUL.

"It is an expression of the gratitude of our people for your services in the war now happily ended, and is a recognition of the services which the various armed forces of the United States have taken in our great victory.

"The government of the United States will doubtless present service medals, or medals of distinction; the state, doubtless, in due time, will in some way convey to you a recognition of the splendid work you have done for our country, but this is Baltimore's recognition to her sons for the contribution of the Baltimore soldier and sailor in the battle for world democracy.

"It so happens that many of our soldiers are still abroad or detained in the camps, and that only a comparatively few certificates can be distributed tonight.

PLACES FOR MEN.

"It is our duty, the duty of the individual, the corporation, and the municipality to take care of, as far as may be, of the returning soldiers and sailors. In the city government we have found places for the soldiers as they come back. We have returned these soldiers and sailors to their places wherever possible, and we are urging the community in like way to find employment for the returning soldiers and sailors so that there may be no unemployment."

General Carter, besides commending the courage and bravery of the men in uniform, took occasion to call attention to the after-war service wherein the men will play a large

ARMORY IN GAY COLORS.

The decorations were particularly attractive and several unique stunts were pulled off, each of which was intended to impress the men and women in uniform, as well as the civilians, with the fact that peace has come as a result of the vallant service rendered by the American soldiers.

Mayor Presents Honors And Gen.

Pay Tribute To Those Who Served

In the presence of a gathering estimated at not less than 15,000 persons, which filled the main floor and the galleries of the Fifth Regiment Armory, Mayor Preston, on behalf of the city of Baltimore, presented to a number of men and women who had served their country during the war certificates of their city's appreciation of their services.

The meeting was one of the biggest that has been held in Baltimore for a long time, and it was made up largely of the families and friends of the men who wore their country's uniform in the war against Germany, and of some of the most representative men and women of the city. It was patriotic to the core, and every reference to the services of the men of the army, navy and Marine Corps and to the nurses was heartily cheered. Then, when the names of those who were to receive the certificates were called out by Oregon Milton Dennis, and as the possessor of the name went to the platform to receive the certificate and the congratulations of the Mayor, there were more cheers. There was no discrimination between those who went abroad and those who were detained in camp.

"They also serve who only stand and wait," quoted the Mayor, "and," he continued, "those men and women who stood in their places, ready for the call to die, if need be, also served, even though the call that was to send them to the battlefields of France or to the ships on the sea did not come. They served by being ready, by standing and waiting for the call."

And everybody cheered this sentiment.

Mr. Warfield Praises Mayor.

The meeting was entirely nonpolitical. The Mayor in his speech, prior to the presentation of the certificates, made not the slightest reference to the political situation, and the only reference to politics in the course of the entire evening was made by former Governor Warfield, who presided, and who, in presenting Mayor Preston, said he was one of the best Mayors Baltimore had ever had; that he did not believe there were many persons in Baltimore who did not desire him to be Mayor again, and that he took pleasure in presenting the next Mayor of the city and the first Mayor of Greater Baltimore. And when the Mayor went to the front of the platform he received an ovation.

In addition to the Mayor, Franklin D. Roosevelt, assistant Secretary of the Navy, and Maj.-Gen. Jesse McI. Carter, representing Secretary of War Baker made addresses. General Carter spoke for the army and Mr. Roosevelt for the navy. The invocation was by Lieut. Reuben W. Shrum, one of the navy chaplains, and the benediction was pronounced by Lieut. John Carroll Moore, former chaplain of the Three Hundred and Thirteenth Infantry.

The certificates of honor were the first of those to be given to all Baltimore men and women who participated in the war. Some of them went to nurses, some to soldiers, some to sailors and some to members of the Marine Corps. All others entitled to them can obtain them, Mayor Preston said, by calling for them at his office in the City Hall.

Presented By Mayor Preston.

In presenting those last night the Mayor said:

"On the part of the citizens of Baltimore and the municipal authorities of Baltimore, I have the honor to present to you this diploma of appreciation.

"It is an expression of the gratitude of our people for your services in the war now happily ended, and is a recognition of the services which the various armed forces of the United States have taken in our great victory.

"The Government of the United States will doubtless present service medals, or medals of distinction; the State doubtless, in due time, will in some way convey to you a recognition of the splendid work you have done for our country, but this is Baltimore's recognition to her sons for the contribution of the Baltimore soldier and sailor in the battle for world democracy.

"It so happens that many of our soldiers are still abroad or detained in the camps and that only a comparatively few certificates can be distributed tonight. There are about 37,000 Baltimoreans in the war service and diplomas will be issued from time to time to those who may be entitled, or shall apply for them. In the case of casualties and invalids the diplomas will be delivered to the parents in my reception room at the City Hall on various occasions, and when the soldiers abroad return home, function will be given in their honor, at which time these certificates will be delivered.

"It is our duty, the duty of the individual, the corporation and the municipality to take care of the returning soldier and sailor. In the city government we have found places for the soldiers as they come back. We have organized them and give and gather to their places, and we are urging the community to the same.

given in their honor, at which time these certificates will be delivered.

"It is our duty, the duty of the individual, the corporation and the municipality to take care of the returning soldiers and sailors. In the city government we have found places for the soldiers as they come back. We have returned these soldiers and sailors to their places, and we are urging the community in like way to find employment for them.

"It is important that both public and private work be speeded up and that we resume our normal activities and this is an obligation of the private citizens as well as the municipality.

Nation Proud Of Her Sons.

"The nation is proud of her sons who fought our victorious battles, and one way of showing this pride is to see that they are not turned away empty-handed when they apply for work.

"If it should develop that unemployment became very general, and it became impossible to furnish through the ordinary channels employment for the soldiers, as well as of any other general and important class of our citizenship, then it will be the duty of the city to undertake public work that will furnish adequate and proper employment.

"It is only by active measures, by returning to our normal activities, by a progressive industrialism and by a wide vision and fearless action that extreme radicalism may be averted. Our duty to the soldiers and sailors, our duty to the country, will require that we look this matter in the face and meet it promptly and adequately."

Happy Thing, Says General Carter.

General Carter's speech was very brief. He said it was a happy thought to bring together the men and women who had taken part in the great world war for human freedom to receive certificates of their city's appreciation of what they had done to serve their country in their country's greatest emergency. It was a happy thing for the city itself, and a happy thing for the men and women who were to receive the certificates.

"For," he said, addressing the soldiers, sailors, marines and nurses who were in front of the platform, "you are all still young. You realize as never before in your lives the importance of the lessons in order and discipline you have learned. On you will depend in large part the future welfare of the country whose uniforms you wore. There will be many problems for you to solve, many crisis that you will have to face for the good of your land, and we trust that throughout your lives you will so conduct yourselves as to reflect honor on the flag under which you served. You have shown a willingness to die for your country; prove that you are true Americans by showing that you are willing to live for it, and let your lives as honorable, upright, law-abiding citizens add to its glory."

Roosevelt Looks To Future.

Assistant Secretary of the Navy Roosevelt followed General Carter.

"It is very fitting," he said, "that the city of Baltimore is thus honoring its citizens who have borne their share in the world conflict, and it is not merely a tribute to the individuals who have had the honor of wearing the uniform of the United States; it is more than that, for it gives proof of a unity of purpose and action of all the people who make up this great community.

"In these days of demobilization and of the resumption of peaceful pursuits, it is well to look back in order that we may more sanely look forward to the future. The men of our armed forces who had the good fortune of getting into the actual conflict across the seas know better than any others the story of the great struggle which plunged the world into a maelstrom nearly five years ago. know even better than we the narrow thread upon which the fate of our civilization hung during more than three of those years. They know the history of our coming, the tremendous final crash of the enemy, one short year ago, and then the turning of the tide and the swift rush of the associated armies to the final victory.

"The final verdict of history will be determined by these men, the clear, true light of America's purpose in entering the war will come home to help us in the days to come.

At Last A Unified Nation.

"Some one has said that the Revolution was the war which gave us our independence, that 1812 was the war which assured it, that the war of '61 was the war which preserved the union of the States, that the Spanish war was the recognition of an ideal, but that it was reserved for the Great War to make us at last one unified nation, north, east, south and west, speaking one tongue, thank God, maintaining a common liberty and recognizing the high purpose of service, the service not only of ourselves but of all mankind.

"That was why we went to war, that is why we pooled our efforts with the Allied armies and navies, that is why the German line gave way at last, that is why today the President of our nation is sought to help by his counsels to solve the great problems of humanity so that nations may not again be torn by conflict.

"The war has given us unity for we have seen how our boys from every State in the Union fought side by side in the same division or served on the same ship. The war has taught the principle and we can look on these men and the spirit they have brought back with them to make a short end to anarchy and lawlessness and the doctrine of destruction that is being preached in many American communities.

Their Task Not Yet Done.

"The army and the navy of the United States was made up of young men, men who will in large part control the destinies and the thought and the action of our country for a generation to come. Their task is not yet done, their responsibility is a heavy one. We need not fear, I am sure, but that they will measure up to the work, that they will give us an assurance that the nation will continue safe as the guiding star of unselfishness and high ideals to all the world."

The program opened with a concert of half an hour, beginning at 7.30 o'clock, by the Naval Academy Band. This was followed by the singing of patriotic music by the choir, composed of 3,000 department store employees, under the direction of Charles G. Woolsey, song leader of the War Camp Community Service. Included in the program were "America," "Soldier Sons of Maryland," "The Long, Long Trail," "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," "The Marine's Hymn," "Baltimore, Our Baltimore," "When You Come Back" and "The Star-Spangled Banner."
