This message of the President was extended over the telephone to the International Assn. of Chiefs of Police at their meeting on September 27, 1934.
Mr. Chairman and Members of the International Association of Chiefs of Police:

It affords me a great deal of pleasure to address this brief personal message of greeting and best wishes to my friends of the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

I wish to commend your organization for the cooperation which it is furnishing in the great movement which the agencies of government -- National, State and local -- are now organizing against the forces of crime. No undertaking is more vital to the welfare of society at this time than that of the prevention and detection of crime. The social order can not exist except upon the basis of a respect for and observance of the law, and it is only when the people of a country are secure in their homes and in the normal activities of life from the depredations of the criminal classes that National progress can be maintained.

This respect for law and this security are possible only when the administration of justice is entrusted to wise, upright, patriotic and courageous officials.

It is of great importance that the International Association of Chiefs of Police shall press forward its vigorous efforts directed toward the elevation of the standards of police institutions and officials. Permit me, therefore, to wish you success in your great work.
ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT
extended over the telephone to the International Association of Chiefs of Police
Washington, D. C., September 27, 1934, 9.30 P.M.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the International Association of Chiefs of Police:

It affords me a great deal of pleasure to address this brief personal message of greeting and best wishes to my friends of the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

I wish to commend your organization for the cooperation which it is furnishing in the great movement which the agencies of government -- National, State and local -- are now organizing against the forces of crime. No undertaking is more vital to the welfare of society at this time than that of the prevention and detection of crime. The social order cannot exist except upon the basis of a respect for and observance of the law, and it is only when the people of a country are secure in their homes and in the normal activities of their lives from the depredations of the criminal classes that National progress can be maintained.

This respect for law and this security are possible only when the administration of justice is entrusted to wise, upright, patriotic and courageous officials.
This is a transcript made by the White House stenographer from his shorthand notes taken at the time the speech was made. Underlining indicates words extemporaneously added to the previously prepared reading copy text. Words in parentheses are words that were omitted when the speech was delivered, though they appear in the previously prepared reading copy text.
It is of great importance that the International Association of Chiefs of Police shall press forward its vigorous efforts directed toward the elevation of the standards of police institutions and officials. Permit me, therefore, to wish you success in your great work.
September 27, 1934

-- The following brief message of greeting, extended over the telephone by the President to the International Association of Chiefs of Police meeting in convention here, is automatically released for publication at 9:30 P.M., Eastern Standard Time, today, September 27, 1934.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the International Association of Chiefs of Police:

It affords me a great deal of pleasure to address this brief personal message of greeting and best wishes to my friends of the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

I wish to commend your organization for the cooperation which it is furnishing in the great movement which the agencies of government -- National, State and local -- are now organizing against the forces of crime. No undertaking is more vital to the welfare of society at this time than that of the prevention and detection of crime. The social order can not exist except upon the basis of a respect for and observance of the law, and it is only when the people of a country are secure in their homes and in the normal activities of their lives from the depredations of the criminal classes that National progress can be maintained.

This respect for law and this security are possible only when the administration of justice is entrusted to wise, upright, patriotic and courageous officials.

It is of great importance that the International Association of Chiefs of Police shall press forward its vigorous efforts directed toward the elevation of the standards of police institutions and officials. Permit me, therefore, to wish you success in your great work.

* * * *
-- The following brief message of greeting, extended over the telephone by the President to the International Association of Chiefs of Police meeting in convention here, is automatically released for publication at 9:30 P. M., Eastern Standard Time, today, September 27, 1934.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the International Association of Chiefs of Police:

It affords me a great deal of pleasure to address this brief personal message of greeting and best wishes to my friends of the International Association of Chiefs of Police.

I wish to commend your organization for the cooperation which it is furnishing in the great movement which the agencies of government -- National, State and local -- are now organizing against the forces of crime. No undertaking is more vital to the welfare of society at this time than that of the prevention and detection of crime. The social order can not exist except upon the basis of a respect for and observance of the law, and it is only when the people of a country are secure in their homes and in the normal activities of their lives from the depredations of the criminal classes that National progress can be maintained.

This respect for law and this security are possible only when the administration of justice is entrusted to wise, upright, patriotic and courageous officials.

It is of great importance that the International Association of Chiefs of Police shall press forward its vigorous efforts directed toward the elevation of the standards of police institutions and officials. Permit me, therefore, to wish you success in your great work.

* * *