Reading Copy
Christmas Greeting--Community Tree-
Lafayette Park, Washington, D. C.
Dec. 24, 1934
This is the second year that I have joined with you on this happy occasion. Then, as now, with millions of others we celebrate the happy observance of Christmas.

The year toward which we looked then with anticipation and hope has passed. We have seen fulfilled many things that a year ago were only hopes. Our human life thus goes on from anticipation and hope to fulfillment.

This year again we are entitled to new hopes and new anticipations.

For all those who can hear but not see this gathering, let me explain that here before us in the park in front of the White House is the monument of a man who will live forever as the embodiment of courage -- Andrew Jackson. His was a long, long life in the public service, distinguished at all times by a chivalrous meeting of problems and difficulties that attended that service; a fast belief in people and a profound love for them. His patriotism was unstained and unafraid. Carved into that monument is his expression of the necessity for union. That message grows in importance with the years.

In these days it means to me a union not only of the States but a union of the hearts and minds of the people in all the States and their many interests and purposes, devoted with unity to the human welfare of our country.

Just across the street is the house he occupied one hundred years ago, the house the people of the country have built for their Presidents. From its windows I see this monument to this man of courage. It is an inspiration to me as it should be to all Americans.

And so let us make the spirit of the Christmas of 1934 that of courage and unity. It is the way to greater happiness and wellbeing. That is, I believe an important part of what the Maker of Christmas would have it mean.

In this sense, the Scriptures admonish us to be strong and of good courage, to fear not; to dwell together in unity.

I wish you one and all, here and everywhere, a very,
very Merry Christmas.
THE PRESIDENT'S CHRISTMAS GREETING

WASHINGTON, D.C.

December 24, 1934, 5:15 P.M.

This is the second year that I have joined with you on this happy occasion. Then, as now, with millions of others we celebrate the happy observance of Christmas.

The year toward which we looked then with anticipation and hope has passed. We have seen fulfilled many things that a year ago were only hopes. Our human life thus goes on from anticipation and hope to fulfillment. This year again we are entitled to new hopes and new anticipations.

For all those who can hear but not see this gathering, let me explain that here before us in the park in front of the White House is the monument of a man who will live forever as the embodiment of courage -- Andrew Jackson. His was a long, long life in the public service, distinguished at all times by a chivalrous meeting of problems and difficulties that attended that service; a fast belief in people and a profound love for them. His patriotism was unstained and unafraid. Carved into that monument is his expression of the necessity for union. That message grows in importance with the years.
This is a transcript made by the White House stenographer from his shorthand notes taken at the time the speech was made. Underlining indicates words extemporaneously added to the previously prepared reading copy text. Words in parentheses are words that were omitted when the speech was delivered, though they appear in the previously prepared reading copy text.

This is the second best that I have written after you can give proper occasion. The very next time of occasion of a Christmas, of recreational and hope and peace. We have seen little, many times over, the few that we know, all the more now of those, the few that we know, all the more now of those.

The best answer that I have ever given is the best answer that I have ever given. This is the very best, the only truth to see...

More and more...
In these days it means to me a union not only of the States but a union of the hearts and minds of the people in all the States and their many interests and purposes, devoted with unity to the human welfare of our country.

Just across the street is the house he occupied one hundred years ago, the house the people of the country have built for their Presidents. From its windows I see this monument to this man of courage. It is an inspiration to me as it should be to all Americans.

And so let us make the spirit of the Christmas of 1934 that of courage and unity. It is the way to greater happiness and well-being. That is, I believe, an important part of what the Maker of Christmas would have it mean.

In this sense, the Scriptures admonish us to be strong and of good courage, to fear not; to dwell together in Unity.

I wish you one and all, here and everywhere, a very, very Merry Christmas.
For the Press

December 24, 1934

CAUTION: The President's Christmas greeting must be held for release.

Release is automatic for 5:15 P.M., E.S.T., today, December 24, 1934.

NOTE: Please safeguard against premature release.

STEPHEN EARLY
Assistant Secretary to the President

This is the second year that I have joined with you on this happy occasion. Then, as now, 150 millions of others we celebrate the happy observance of Christmas.

The year toward which we looked then with anticipation and hope has passed. We have seen fulfilled many things that a year ago were only hopes. Our human life thus goes on from anticipation and hope to fulfillment. This year again we are entitled to new hopes and new anticipations.

For all those who can hear but not see this gathering, let me explain that here before us in the park in front of the White House is the monument of a man who will live forever as the embodiment of courage — Andrew Jackson. His was a long, long life in the public services, distinguished at all times by a chivalrous meeting of problems and difficulties that attended that service; a fast belief in people and a profound love for them. His patriotism was sustained and unafraid. Carved into that monument is his expression of the necessity for union. That message grows in importance with the years.

In these days it means to me a union not only of the States but a union of the hearts and minds of the people in all the States and their many interests and purposes, devoted with unity to the human welfare of our country.

Just across the street is the house he occupied one hundred years ago, the house the people of the country have built for their Presidents. From its windows I see this monument to this sum of courage. It is an inspiration to me as it should be to all Americans.

And so let us make the spirit of the Christmas of 1934 that of courage and unity. It is the way to greater happiness and well-being. That is, I believe, an important part of what the Maker of Christmas would have it mean.

In this sense, the Scriptures admonish us to be strong and of good courage, to fear not; to dwell together in Unity.

I wish you one and all, here and everywhere, a very, very Merry Christmas.
For the Press
December 24, 1934

CAUTION: The President's Christmas greeting must be held for release.

Release is automatic for 5:15 P.M., E.S.T., today, December 24, 1934.

NOTE: Please safeguard against premature release.

STEPHEN EARLY
Assistant Secretary to the President

This is the second year that I have joined you on this happy occasion. Then, as now, with millions of others we celebrate the happy observance of Christmas.

The year toward which we looked then with anticipation and hope has passed. We have seen fulfilled many things that a year ago were only hopes. Our human life thus goes on from anticipation and hope to fulfillment. This year again we are entitled to new hopes and new anticipations.

For all those who can hear but not see this gathering, let me explain that here before us in the park in front of the White House is the monument of a Man who will live forever as the embodiment of courage - Andrew Jackson. His was a long, long life in the public service, distinguished at all times by a chivalrous meeting of problems and difficulties that attended that service; a steadfast belief in people and a profound love for them. His patriotism was unstained and unafraid. Carved into that monument is his expression of the necessity for union. That message grows in importance with the years.

In these days it means to me a union not only of the States but a union of the hearts and minds of the people in all the States and their many interests and purposes, devoted with unity to the human welfare of our country.

Just across the street is the house he occupied one hundred years ago, the house the people of the country have built for their Presidents. From its windows I see this monument to this man of courage. It is an inspiration to me as it should be to all Americans.

And so let us make the spirit of the Christmas of 1934 that of courage and unity. It is the way to greater happiness and well-being. That is, I believe, an important part of what the Maker of Christmas would have it mean.

In this sense, the Scriptures admonish us to be strong and of good courage, to fear not; to dwell together in Unity.

I wish you one and all, here and everywhere, a very, very Merry Christmas.
THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON
12/26, 1934

MISS LE HANDEL:
This is the copy of the President's Christmas greetings at the Community
Tree exercises in La Fayette Square, Washington,
D. C., December 24, 1934.

STEPHEN EARLY
This is the second year that I have joined with you on this happy occasion. Then, as now, with millions of others we celebrate the happy observance of Christmas.

The year toward which we looked with anticipation and hope has passed. We are reassured by the fulfillment of so many things that a year ago were only hopes. Our human life goes on from anticipation and hope to fulfillment, and so again we are entitled to a renewal of new hopes and new anticipations.

For all those who can hear but not see this gathering, let me explain that here before us is the monument of a man who will live forever as the embodiment of courage — Andrew Jackson. His long, distinguished life in the public service, his chivalrous meeting of problems and difficulties that attended that service; his fast belief in people and his profound love for them, his patriotism, unstained and unafraid. Carved into that monument is his expression of the necessity for union. That message grows in importance with the years.
In these days it means to me a union not only of the States but of the hearts and minds of the people of the States and their many interests and purposes, devoted to the human welfare of our country.

Just across the street is the house he occupied one hundred years ago, the house the people of the country have built for their Presidents. From its windows I see this monument to this man of courage. It is an inspiration to me as it should be to all Americans.

And so let us make the spirit of Christmas of 1954 that of courage and unity. It is the way to greater happiness and wellbeing. That is, I believe an important part of what the Maker of Christmas would have it mean.

In this sense, the Scriptures admonish us to be strong and of good courage, to fear not; to dwell together in Unity.

I wish you one and all, here and everywhere, a very, very Merry Christmas.
For the Press

December 24, 1934

CAUTION: The President's Christmas greeting must be held for release.

Release is automatic for 5:15 P. M., E. S. T., today, December 24, 1934.

NOTE: Please safeguard against premature release.

STEPHEN EARLY
Assistant Secretary to the President