GOVERNOR JOHNSTON, MR. MAYOR, MY FRIENDS:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons: First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have breakfast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was; a most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable State I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I had a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Lieutenant Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents -- all of the others -- fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, when the Revolution started, he went to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, when I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the
This is a transcript made by the White House stenographer from his shorthand notes taken at the time the speech was made. Underlining indicates words extemporaneously added to the previously prepared reading copy text. Words in parentheses are words that were omitted when the speech was delivered, though they appear in the previously prepared reading copy text.
Navy Yard in Charleston should be reopened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me -- very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Olin Johnston's house.
Governor Johnston, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons. First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have breakfast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was; a most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable state I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I have a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Lieutenant Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents -- all of the others -- fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, when the Revolution started, he went to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, when I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the Navy Yard in Charleston should be reopened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me -- very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Olin Johnston's house.

******
INFORMAL, EXTEMPORANEOUS REMARKS
OF THE PRESIDENT,
State House, Columbia, S.C.,
December 5, 1938, 10:15 P.M.

Governor Johnston, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons: First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have breakfast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was; a most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable state I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I have a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Lieutenant Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents -- all of the others -- fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, when the Revolution started, he went to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, when I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the Navy Yard in Charleston should be re-opened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me -- very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Olin Johnston’s house.

* * * * *
INFORMAL, EXTERRROPHERRE REMARKS
OF THE PRESIDENT,
State House, Columbia, S.C.,
December 5, 1938, 10:15 P.M.

Governor Johnston, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons: First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have breakfast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was; a most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable state I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I have a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Lieutenant Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents -- all of the others -- fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, when the Revolution started, he went to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, when I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the Navy Yard in Charleston should be reopened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me -- very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Olin Johnston's house.

* * * * *
INFORMAL, EXTERRPORANEOUS REMARKS
OF THE PRESIDENT,
State House, Columbia, S.C.,
December 5, 1938, 10.15 P.M.

Governor Johnston, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons: First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have break­fast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was; a most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable state I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I have a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Lieutenant Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents — all of the others — fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, when the Revolution started, he went to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, when I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the Navy Yard in Charleston should be re­opened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me — very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Olin Johnston's house.

* * * * *
INFORMAL, EXTEMPORANEOUS REMARKS
OF THE PRESIDENT,
State House, Columbia, S.C.,
December 5, 1938, 10:15 P.M.

Governor Johnston, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons: First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have breakfast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was; a most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable state I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I have a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Leftenent Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents -- all of the others -- fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, when the Revolution started, he went to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, as I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the Navy Yard in Charleston should be reopened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me -- very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Olin Johnston's house.

* * * * *

* * * * *
INFORMAL, EXTemporaneous Remarks
OF THE PRESIDENT,
State House, Columbia, S.C.,
December 5, 1936, 10.15 P.M.

Governor Johnston, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons: First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have breakfast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was; a most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable state I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I have a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Lieutenant Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents — all of the others — fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, when the Revolution started, he went to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, when I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the Navy Yard in Charleston should be reopened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me — very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Olin Johnston’s house.

*******
INFORMAL, EXTemporaneous Remarks
OF THE PRESIDENT,
State House, Columbia, S. C.,
December 5, 1933, 10:15 P.M.

Governor Johnston, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons: First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have breakfast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was; a most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable state I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I have a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Lieutenant Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents — all of the others — fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, then the Revolution started, he went to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, when I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the Navy Yard in Charleston should be reopened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me — very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Olin Johnston's house.

* * * * *
INFORMAL, EXTEMPORANEOUS REMARKS
OF THE PRESIDENT,
State House, Columbia, S.C.,
December 5, 1933, 10:15 P.M.

Governor Johnston, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons: First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have breakfast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was! A most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable state I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I have a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Lieutenant Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents — all of the others — fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, when the Revolution started, he went to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, as I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the Navy Yard in Charleston should be re-opened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me — very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Olin Johnston's house.

* * * * *
INFORMAL, EXTENORANEOUS REMARKS
OF THE PRESIDENT
State House, Columbia, S.C.,
December 5, 1938, 10:15 P.M.

Governor Johnston, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons: First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have breakfast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was; a most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable state I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I have a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Lieutenant Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents -- all of the others -- fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, when the Revolution started, he went to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, when I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the Navy Yard in Charleston should be reopened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me -- very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Clin Johnston's house.

* * * * *
INFORMAL, EXTEMPORANEOUS REMARKS
OF THE PRESIDENT,
State House, Columbia, S.C.,
December 5, 1938, 10:15 P.M.

Governor Johnston, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons: First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have breakfast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was; a most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable state I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I have a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Lieutenant Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents — all of the others — fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, when the Revolution started, he sent to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, when I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the Navy Yard in Charleston should be reopened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me — very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Olin Johnston's house.

*******
INFORMAL, EXTEMPORANEOUS REMARKS
OF THE PRESIDENT,
State House, Columbia, S.C.,
December 5, 1938, 10:15 P.M.

Governor Johnston, Mr. Mayor, my friends:

I am very glad to come here for many reasons: First, because it fulfills an old pledge which I made to Governor Johnston more than two years ago that I would have breakfast with him in Columbia before he left office. And what a breakfast it was; a most delicious meal but I know that if I consumed three meals a day like it in this hospitable state I would no longer be able to get around the country.

You know, I was saying a few minutes ago in the car that I have a very old association with the State of South Carolina, one that goes back even before it was a state, for my great, great grandfather, James Murray, was a Royal Lieutenant Governor of the Colony of South Carolina. Many of my great, great grandparents — all of the others — fought on the side or worked on the side of the revolutionists in 1776 and it was only old James Murray that remained true to the Crown and became what was known in those days as a Loyalist and, when the Revolution started, he went to Canada and lies buried there today. He was the only one of all my ancestors who did not side with the Colonists and who was not buried on American soil.

So you see that my connection with this State goes back very, very far.

In my own lifetime I have had many opportunities to visit South Carolina. In the old days, when I was in the Navy Department, a famous son of your State, Senator Tillman, insisted to me that the Navy Yard in Charleston should be reopened, it having been virtually closed by the predecessor of President Wilson. I took part in the reopening of that Navy Yard and today the Federal Government knows well that the State of South Carolina is part of the Union.

I am glad to have been here and very grateful to all of you for the wonderful hospitality that you have shown to me — very grateful especially to the children of the Methodist Orphanage who sent that sausage up to Ole Johnston's house.

* * * * *