

October 10, 1937

[Gridiron Club Dinner]

1587

FDR Speech File

Vasco Prudha said to Dan Quinlan a few minutes ago
My God we're off
of course

REMARKS OF THE PRESIDENT
 AT THE GRIDIRON CLUB DINNER
 WASHINGTON, D. C.,
 APRIL 10, 1937.

<sup>old friend</sup>
 When I learned that Myron Taylor was to speak at the Gridiron dinner tonight, I realized, in the first place, that because he and I agree on so many factors and fundamentals in our Governmental, social and economic problems he had not been invited in the usual sense, that he was to speak for the opposition, and I for the Government. He was invited, I assume, to speak as a representative, <sup>I since hearing him & know,</sup> <sup>and thoughtful - And I am partial to him for his</sup> <sup>successful & educated American. But in thinking about him</sup> <sup>for his</sup> <sup>statement</sup> <sup>of</sup> <sup>his</sup> <sup>ideals</sup>
 I said to myself: "What is the first thing that comes into my head?" It is not Myron Taylor, the distinguished lawyer of New York; it is not Myron Taylor, the Chairman of the Board of the United States Steel Corporation; it is the Myron Taylor that I know best - the Myron Taylor who says to me, whenever he sees me: "I am just waiting for the chance to go back to Florence; I am just waiting for the chance to spend more time on my avocations and less time on my vocations." And that is the kind of thing that I wish we did more of in the United States.

<sup>to take</sup>
<sup>my</sup>
<sup>holiday</sup>

At the time of our beginnings on this continent there was little opportunity for recreation or the arts. Breaking the wilderness, especially in the age of puritanism, was a stern task. Culture and play as we know them were rare indeed before the Revolution. The richer families sent occasional sons to make the Grand Tour in Europe. A few of the great landowners of Virginia hunted foxes.
and Maryland & the Carolinas

But With the formation of the nation the understanding of culture progressed. George Washington experimented with ~~the lands~~, his crops and his gardens at Mount Vernon. Thomas Jefferson designed Monticello and the University of Virginia. Benjamin Franklin delved in philosophy and science. Chancellor Livingston financed Robert Fulton, the poor inventor. A little later Andrew Jackson, when not

modestly occupied by the Bank of the United States and the Supreme Court, turned his hand to horseracing. Still later, in the 70's & 80's especially in the adolescent cities of the Middlewest, Robert Browning Societies were organized, and medieval castles filled with Victorian art dotted the lake-fronts. Eugene Fields' "Culture's Garland" is one of our greatest American classic satires. But we should perhaps remember that the ~~laughable~~, amazing, crude culture of the America of sixty or seventy years ago was the inevitable forerunner of the avocations which have brought us in these later days ~~the~~
M. <sup>great</sup> Mellon National Gallery of Art, the museums, the libraries, <sup>the</sup> Universities, and indeed the whole range of the culture of today.

But we still do not know how to play. Our foreign cousins are far ahead of us.

I like to think, for example, of the British Colonel who has spent most of his life in India. When he goes back <sup>to England</sup> ~~home~~ to retire with pay at sixty or sixty-five - and this is honestly not intended to apply, in any way, to any present age issue in the United States - he is not lost. He does water colors, or he raises a ~~perennial~~ <sup>special variety</sup> ~~grows~~ of flowers, or he goes in for ornithology, or for some other avocation that not only gives him intense pleasure, but keeps him out of mischief!

In other nations great numbers of men start in their younger days to take an interest in outside things - outside of the government, outside of the army, <sup>outside of the lands,</sup> outside of their careers, outside of their professions and their businesses.

But these avocations need not be limited to those in high places, or those with large private means. Some persons go in for collecting Italian art, some collect etchings, some ship models, some antiques, some even postage stamps. I like, among other diversions, to plant trees at Hyde Park or Warm Springs; I also like deep sea fishing. But if the principle of an avocation is good for some of us, it should be good for all of us, for our families and our children.

And especially we are coming to realize that avocations
are not confined to collecting things, nor are they to be confined to those blessed with riches.

I know
~~there~~ a Southern cotton mill ~~that I know about~~ that had never in all its history of thirty or forty years given a single day of holiday with pay in the whole year - ~~it was work~~ six days <sup>a year</sup>
a week, 52 weeks with only Sundays off. There was no such thing as recreation in that town. When NRA came into operation, the workers were given under the Code - Code No. 1, Saturday and Sunday off. During the first two week-ends, the people in that town did not know what to do with themselves, what to do with two consecutive days of holiday. They began to get restive, wanted to go out and smash something, not a sit-down strike. Some of the wise leaders among the workers said to the owners of the cotton mill: "We do not know what to do with Saturday and Sunday off. We are not accustomed to two days' holiday.
Could you tell us something about what is called 'athletics'?"
The owner of the mill, having some sympathy for them, sent for an athletic director, and turned over a vacant cotton field for their use. They built tennis courts, football fields, baseball diamonds and a swimming pool. And today there are athletic facilities for the entire community, not only for the adults but for the children too. And that is part of the story of avocations.

About a month later, a pastor in a local church got up and said to his congregation: "I want to ask you a question. How many out of the four hundred of you have ever seen the ocean, or seen a steamship? Hold up your hands!" And two people held up their hands. That place was less than 300 miles from the sea. The pastor said: "Would you all like to see the ocean? I have found out from the ticket agent that we can get a special train on Friday night, when the mill closes. We will go to an historic city on the coast where we can ~~stay~~ <sup>stay at</sup> the beach and watch the ships go by. We will sleep in the coaches Saturday night so that we will not have any hotel bills, and Sunday we will see the historic sights of that city and get back here in time for work Monday morning. Who wants to go?" The whole congregation held up their hands. Just another, That is part of the story of avocations. And the minimum wage paid for the tickets. for those cotton mill operations RR

One need not be too serious about his avocations, however. For example, at small cost and no great expenditure of effort, one might be active in Republican politics. That would be an avocation!

I understand that members of the Gridiron Club, when not rehearsing, find their avocation in writing occasional articles for the newspapers.

There is a member of the Supreme Court whose avocation is Chief Justice - High Bank making speeches at fraternity banquets. There are college chemists who like to appear as witnesses before Judiciary Committees.

There was a recent Vice-President of the United States who composed music for the violin, and there is a current Vice-President whose avocation - rare in politics - is to make no speeches.

Avocation For myself, I still hope to find time to read the Washington Evening Star, to which the chairman of this dinner is a distinguished contributor. God knows reading The Star would have to be an avocation; it would almost be a life work - on a par with delving into the Mayan civilization, becoming a good chess player, or translating Plutarch's Lives. I have always wondered what one would find on Page 148 of The Star, but I never got further than the editorial page, where its reckless expressions of opinion incite and inflame the populace. I fear that with this background Dictator Gould Lincoln will find it hard to restrain his iron impulses in directing the affairs of the Gridiron Club. Members, guard well your liberties against Executive usurpation. Do not hitch your Gridiron horse and buggy to The Star.

I am glad to see that the Gridiron Club is becoming more and more modern in its treatment of public questions. At one of your recent dinners, there was a skit about Noah's Ark. Tonight we have progressed as far as the Pharaohs and even presented the Imperial Russian ballet. You have caught up to within twenty years of today.

The Gridiron Club, I think, needs more of the spirit of youth. You must catch your hobbies earlier. We have been shown very strikingly tonight that ~~can't~~ start out at - well, forty-five, - and hope to be a ballerina as a side issue to writing for The New York Times. Some of our hosts ~~may~~ have "lovely, lovely voices," but I would suggest that the next time they feel that impulse for the light fantastic, they cover their lower extremities with dainty but ankle-length pantalettes. Art for Art's sake is all very well, but future Gridiron audiences are going to ~~suggest~~ that the members of the ballet visit the barber before any future performance.

And so I say to you of the Gridiron Club, razor or no razor, more power to you, to your wives and young lags.

I announce as a fundamental policy of this Administration that we seek more leisure, leisure for the Press, leisure for the Government - avocations for the Congress and for the Judiciary - more time for the President to fish. In the times of our leisure when work-a-day cares are banished, we can perhaps smile a little more and find a greater refreshment for our souls. With the wise philosopher let us seek that little leisure ~~in which we may~~ not only ~~we~~ grow in the sun, but ~~we~~ grow <sup>Also</sup> and ~~we~~ <sup>our</sup> ~~time~~, more ripe in the shade time of ~~life~~.

Franklin D Roosevelt
.....
(Original writing copy)

REMARKS OF THE PRESIDENT
AT THE GRIDIRON CLUB DINNER
WASHINGTON, D. C.,
APRIL 10, 1937.

When I learned that Myron Taylor was to speak at the Gridiron dinner tonight, I realized, in the first place, that because he and I agree on so many factors and fundamentals in our Governmental, social and economic problems he had not been invited in the usual sense, that he was to speak for the opposition, and I for the Government. He was invited, I assume, to speak as a representative successful and educated American. But in thinking about him I said to myself: "What is the first thing that comes into my head?" It is not Myron Taylor, the distinguished lawyer of New York; it is not Myron Taylor, the Chairman of the Board of the United States Steel Corporation; it is the Myron Taylor that I know best - the Myron Taylor who says to me, whenever he sees me: "I am just waiting for the chance to go back to Florence; I am just waiting for the chance to spend more time on my avocations and less time on my vocations." And that is the kind of thing that I wish we did more of in the United States.

At the time of our beginnings on this continent there was little opportunity for recreation or the arts. Breaking the wilderness, especially in the age of puritanism, was a stern task. Culture and play as we know them were rare indeed before the Revolution. The richer families sent occasional sons to make the Grand Tour in Europe. A few of the great landowners of Virginia hunted foxes.

With the formation of the nation the understanding of culture progressed. George Washington experimented with his herds, his crops and his gardens at Mount Vernon. Thomas Jefferson designed Monticello and the University of Virginia. Benjamin Franklin delved in philosophy and science. Chancellor Livingston financed Robert Fulton, the poor inventor. A little later Andrew Jackson, when not occupied by the Bank of the United States and the Supreme Court, turned his hand to horseracing. Still later, especially in the adolescent cities of the Middlewest, Browning societies were organized and medieval castles filled with Victorian art dotted the lake front. Eugene Fields' "Culture's Garland" is one of our greatest American classic satires. But we should perhaps remember that the laughable, amazing, crude culture of the America of sixty or seventy years ago was the inevitable forerunner of the avocations which have brought us in these later days the Mellon National Gallery of Art, the museums, the libraries, and indeed the whole range of the culture of today.

But we still do not know how to play. Our foreign cousins are far ahead of us.

I like to think, for example, of the British Colonel who has spent most of his life in India. When he goes back home to retire with pay at sixty or sixty-five - and this is honestly not intended to apply, in any way, to any present age issue in the United States - he is not lost. He does water colors, or he raises a particular genus of flowers, or he goes in for ornithology, or for some other avocation that not only gives him intense pleasure, but keeps him out of mischief!

In other nations great numbers of men start in their younger days to take an interest in outside things - outside of the government, outside of the army, outside of their careers, outside of their professions and their businesses.

But these avocations need not be limited to those in high places, or those with large private means. Some persons go in for collecting Italian art, some collect etchings, some ship models, some antiques, some even postage stamps. I like, among other diversions, to plant trees at Hyde Park or Warm Springs; I also like deep sea fishing. But if the principle of an avocation is good for some of us, it should be good for all of us, for our families and our children.

And especially we are coming to realize that avocations
are not confined to collecting things, nor are they to be confined to those blessed with riches.

There was a Southern cotton mill that I know about that had never in all its history of thirty or forty years given a single day of holiday with pay in the whole year - six days a week, 52 weeks with only Sundays off. There was no such thing as recreation in that town. When NRA came into operation, the workers were given under the Code - Code No. 1, Saturday and Sunday off. During the first two week-ends, the people in that town did not know what to do with themselves, what to do with two consecutive days of holiday. They began to get restive, wanted to go out and smash something, not a sit-down strike. Some of the wise leaders among the workers said to the owners of the cotton mill: "We do not know what to do with Saturday and Sunday off. We are not accustomed to two days' holiday.
Could you tell us something about what is called 'athletics'?"
The owner of the mill, having some sympathy for them, sent

( - )

for an athletic director, and turned over a vacant cotton field for their use. They built tennis courts, football fields, baseball diamonds and a swimming pool. And today there are athletic facilities for the entire community, not only for the adults but for the children too. And that is part of the story of avocations.

About a month later, a pastor in a local church got up and said to his congregation: "I want to ask you a question. How many out of the four hundred of you have ever seen the ocean, or seen a steamship? Hold up your hands!" And two people held up their hands. That place was less than 300 miles from the sea. The pastor said: "Would you all like to see the ocean? I have found out from the ticket agent that we can get a special train on Friday night, when the mill closes. We will go to an historic city on the coast where we can go to the beach and watch the ships go by. We will sleep in the coaches Saturday night so that we will not have any hotel bills, and Sunday we will see the historic sights of that city and get back here in time for work Monday morning. Who wants to go?" The whole congregation held up their hands. That is part of the story of avocations. And the minimum wage paid for the tickets.

One need not be too serious about his avocations, however. For example, at small cost and no great expenditure of effort, one might be active in Republican politics. That is an avocation!

I understand that members of the Gridiron Club, when not rehearsing, find their avocation in writing occasional articles for the newspapers.

There is a member of the Supreme Court whose avocation is making speeches at fraternity banquets. There are college chemists who like to appear as witnesses before Judiciary Committees. There was a recent Vice-President of the United States who composed music for the violin, and there is a current Vice-President whose avocation - rare in politics - is to make no speeches.

For myself, I still hope to find time to read the Washington Evening Star, to which the chairman of this dinner is a distinguished contributor. God knows reading The Star would have to be an avocation; it would almost be a life work - on a par with delving into the Mayan civilization, becoming a good chess player, or translating Plutarch's Lives. I have always wondered what one would find on Page 148 of The Star, but I never got further than the editorial page, where its reckless expressions of opinion incite and inflame the populace. I fear that with this background Dictator Gould Lincoln will find it hard to restrain his iron impulses in directing the affairs of the Gridiron Club. Members, guard well your liberties against Executive usurpation. Do not hitch your Gridiron horse and buggy to The Star.

I am glad to see that the Gridiron Club is becoming more and more modern in its treatment of public questions. At one of your recent dinners, there was a skit about Noah's Ark. Tonight we have progressed as far as the Pharaohs and even presented the Imperial Russian ballet. You have caught up to within twenty years of today.

The Gridiron Club, I think, needs more of the spirit of youth. You must catch your hobbies earlier. We have been shown very strikingly tonight that one cannot start out at - well, forty-five, - and hope to be a ballerina as a side issue to writing for The New York Times. Some of our hosts may have "lovely, lovely voices," but I would suggest that the next time they feel that impulse for the light fantastic, they cover their lower extremities with dainty but ankle-length pantalettes. Art for Art's sake is all very well, but future Gridiron audiences are going to insist that the members of the ballet visit the barber before any future performance.

And so I say to you of the Gridiron Club, razor or no razor, more power to you.

I announce as a fundamental policy of this Administration that we seek more leisure, leisure for the Press, leisure for the Government - avocations for the Congress and for the Judiciary - more time for the President to fish. In the times of our leisure when work-a-day cares are banished, we can perhaps smile a little more and find a greater refreshment for our souls. With the wise philosopher let us seek that little leisure in which not only to grow in the sun, but to grow more ripe in the shade time of life.

* * * * *