INFORMAL REMARKS Of The President
At Union Station Plaza, Washington, D. C.
November 10, 1944
About 9.10 a.m., e.w.t.

Mr. President of the Commission, and to the other Commissioners:

This is a very wonderful welcome home that you have given me on this rather rainy morning, a welcome home that I shall always remember. And when I say a welcome home, I hope that some of the scribes in the papers won't intimate that I expect to make Washington my permanent residence for the rest of my life.

In all these years -- eight years in the Navy Department, and twelve years now, and four to come -- it has had a great effect on Washington. Today it is very different from the Washington that I first came to in the first administration of President Cleveland. I go back -- Russ Young and I go back, I think, to Cleveland's first administration, because we are the same age.

So I want to tell you how glad I am to be here and say one word to you -- especially the Government workers -- for all that you are doing to win this war. And when I say especially the Government workers, I don't overlook all the other people in the city who make it possible for them to come here and live here and work here.

So, thanks very much.
This is a transcript made by the White House stenographer from his shorthand notes taken at the time the speech was made. Underlining indicates words extemporaneously added to the previously prepared reading copy text. Words in parentheses are words that were omitted when the speech was delivered, though they appear in the previously prepared reading copy text.
Informal Remarks of the President at Union Station, Washington, D. C.

Mr. President and other Commissioners:

This is a very wonderful welcome home that you have given me on this rather rainy morning — a welcome that I shall always remember. And when I say a welcome home, I hope that some of the scribes in the papers won't intimate that I expect to make Washington my permanent residence for the rest of my life.

All these years — eight in the Navy Department, twelve in the White House — and four to come — will have a great effect on Washington. The city is very different from the Washington that I first came to in the first administration of President Cleveland. I go back — Russ Young and I go back, I think, to Cleveland's first administration, because we are the same age.

So I want to tell you how glad I am to be here and say one word to you — especially the Government workers — for all that you are doing to win this war. And when I say especially Government workers, I don't overlook all the other people in the city who make it possible for them to come here and live here and work here.

So thanks very much.
November 10, 1944

Mr. President of the Commission and the other Commissioners:

This is a very wonderful welcome home that you have given me on this rather rainy morning - a welcome that I shall always remember. And when I say welcome home, I hope that some of the scribes in the papers won't intimate that I expect to make Washington my permanent residence for the rest of my life.

All these years -- eight years in the Navy Department, and twelve years now, and four to come -- have had a great effect on Washington. This is very different from the Washington that I first came to in the first administration of President Cleveland.

I go back -- Russ Young and I go back, I think, to Cleveland's first administration, because we are the same age. So I want to tell you how glad I am to be here and say one word to you -- especially the Government workers -- for all that you are doing to win this war. And when I say especially the Government workers, I don't overlook all the other people in the City who make it possible for them to come here and live here and work here.

So thanks very much.
Informal Remarks of the President at Union Station, Washington, D. C.

Mr. President and other Commissioners:

This is a very wonderful welcome home that you have given me on this rather rainy morning — a welcome that I shall always remember. And when I say a welcome home, I hope that some of the scribes in the papers won't intimate that I expect to make Washington my permanent residence for the rest of my life.

All these years — eight in the Navy Department, twelve in the White House — and four to come — will have a great effect on Washington. The city is very different from the Washington that I first came to in the first administration of President Cleveland. I go back — Russ Young and I go back, I think, to Cleveland's first administration, because we are the same age.

So I want to tell you how glad I am to be here and say one word to you — especially the Government workers — for all that you are doing to win this war. And when I say especially Government workers, I don't overlook all the other people in the city who make it possible for them to come here and live here and work here.

So thanks very much.
November 10, 1944

At Union Station

Mr. President of the Commission, and to the other Commissioners:

This is a very wonderful welcome home that you have given me on this rather rainy morning, a welcome home that I shall always remember. And when I say welcome home, I hope that some of the scribes in the papers won't intimate that I expect to make Washington my permanent residence for the rest of my life.

In all these years -- eight years in the Navy Department, and twelve years now, and four to come -- it has had a great effect on Washington. Today it is very different from the Washington that I first came to in the first administration of President Cleveland.

I go back -- Russ Young and I go back, I think, to Cleveland's first administration, because we are the same age. So I want to tell you how glad I am to be here and say one word to you -- especially the Government workers -- for all that you are doing to win this war. And when I say especially the Government workers, I don't overlook all the other people in the City who make it possible for them to come here and live here and work here.

So, thanks very much.

[Handwritten note]

Informal Remarks of the President at Union Station Plaza, Washington, D.C.
November 10, 1944, about 9:16 a.m., EDT.